† Ring of the Löwenskölds. Doubleday
y 1931 3v in 1 $3

Contains the following: The general's ring, tr. by Francesa Martin (1928); Charlotte Löwensköld, tr. by V. S. Howard (1927); Anna Svård, tr. by V. S. Howard (1931)

"Taken together, they represent study of inherited family character traits. 'The general's ring' is the story of a curse that comes upon the possessors of a ring stolen from old General Löwensköld's tomb. The second novel, the subject of which is this family curse operating a hundred years later, unfolds the love affair of Charlotte Löwensköld and Karl Arthur, a fanatic young minister. Continuing with 'Anna Svård,' the third novel, we find Karl Arthur breaking off with Charlotte to marry the peasant girl, Anna. While Theo Sundler, a Löwensköld who has inherited the old family traits of jealous cupidity, almost precipitates tragedy in this marriage, Anna's beauty of character and thrifty peasant common-sense triumph; and, thru the aid of Charlotte Löwensköld, the household is redeemed finally from the baleful Löwensköld curse." Ordeal of the Falcon. Vanguard 1941 286p $2.50

"Lured from home by an advertisement for a crew for the steamship Falcon, a 17-year-old Swedish boy arrived at Gothenburg. The Falcon was a battered old tramp, with no trace of the glamour he had expected, and he was assigned to the engine room. The voyage was a merciless one that put every man to the test—grueling work in tropic heat and bitter cold, crippling storms, and a heartless captain. Sven saw each man meet it in his own way, saw, but seldom shared, the orgies of sailors in foreign ports, and was satisfied at the end." Bkl.

"This first volume of a proletarian trilogy begins by describing a lace-maker's family in a Swedish town. It pictures their home life, their daily struggle to make ends meet, and their persistent efforts to get the best out of life despite difficult circumstances. The book ends by showing the whole community in the grip of poverty and despair due to a general strike. Simply and movingly written. Particularly good in its delineation of children. A community chronicle rather than a story with a plot." Bkl

Captain's doll; three novelettes. Viking 1923 323p $2.50

Analyzed in Index to short stories
Contents: Captain's doll; Fox; Lady-bird

Kangaroo. Seltzer 1923 421p o.p. 1941

"With little incident the story centers about the psychic experiences of Richard Lovatt Somers, as induced by the war and the chaotic condition of the after-war world. A voluntary exile from England since the war, he, with his wife Harriet, has wandered about Europe and India and has at last reached Australia, the scene of the story. He is a writer and a lonely soul, given to thought adventuring and shrinking from human contact, altho always aspiring to align himself with some project of human endeavor. Twice in Australia the opportunity offers and twice he stands off, estranging the friends who have counted upon him. The most keenly disappointed is Kangaroo, an ardent soul who would redeem the world with love, would institute a dictatorship of love and to that end has become the leader of a league of ex-soldiers. After his death Somers' sense of loneliness and frustration increases to the point of morbidity. The narrative abounds in reflections upon freedom, democracy and civilization both in their general and in their Australian aspects." Book rev. digest

Lost girl Viking 1921 378p $2.50

"The heroine is Alvina Houghton, daughter of an unsuccessful draper in the Midlands. For a time Alvina escapes from her environment to take nurses' training, but when she returns there is no opening for practice and she drops back into her old place in the household. She is on the verge of old maidhood when her father, in his downward course, becomes owner of a small theater. Alvina plays the piano and so is thrown in with a troupe of wandering players. With one of them, an Italian, she has a love affair. She breaks this off to take up nursing but eventually returns to her lover, this time to marry him and go with him to Italy where their life together is cut short by the war." Book rev. digest

Plumed serpent <Quetzalcoatl>. Knopf 1926 445p $2.50

"A remarkable attempt to penetrate to the essential spirit of modern Mexico as it reveals itself to a lovely world-weary Irish-woman resident there. The Plumed Serpent is the English name of one of the old Aztec gods, Quetzalcoatl, and the action of the story is based upon a semi-mystical, semi-political movement to revive the cult of the ancient deities. The strange philosophy of the author, the legends interspersed, the rich sensuousness of the style and in holding the interest to the end of a long volume." Cleveland

‡ Sons and lovers. Viking 1913 517p $2.50

"An intense and realistic story in which the relationship of mother and son is the predominating theme. There are two other women in Paul Morel's life; Miriam, highly sensitive and spiritual, who appeals only to his higher nature; and Clara, a woman of fire and passion, who draws him with the lure of the senses. Neither satisfies him; and neither can wean him from devotion to his mother." Book rev. digest

Virgin and the gipsy Knopf 1930 175p $2

"Posthumous, and left with some improbabilities, even in the culminating scene, which would perhaps have been smoothed away. One of his most successful figures of a young girl, cast in his favourite mould, daughter of a poor-spirited rector in a Derbyshire village, is drawn to a gipsy, as Lady Chatterley is to her gamekeeper. The clergyman's old mother is wonderful in her repulsiveness." Baker's Best

Women in love Viking 1921 548p $2.50

Also obtainable from Modern lib. for 95c

"This sums up the author's mystical theories of sex, still tentative . . . obscure . . . and by no means stated in a way to conciliate criticism. There are three women . . . and two men of opposite natures, one of whom, almost the authors direct mouthpiece, craves something 'beyond love, beyond any emotional relationship.'" Baker's Best

Boy in the bush. Viking 1924 388p $2.50

"The story traces the development of Jack Grant, a young man who goes out to Australia to escape from the restrictions of England. He is a natural aristocrat, a man who will not conform; but the sprawling freedom of Australia soon disgusts him, and he finds happiness in obedience to 'the dark Lord' in himself. He is shown in action throughout, and the action is rapid and decisive. There are a great number of vivid scenes against the perpetual background of Australian landscape and life." "Traces the influence of [the vice of self sacrifice] in the lives of three sisters, middle-aged and middle-class Americans. . . * Sound of running feet. Stokes 1937 307p y $2.50

"Young members of a small staff in a real estate office, which is badly hit by the depression, demand an increase in wages; the older ones, fearful of their positions, refuse to join. The employers, scarcely able to pay present salaries, explain why a raise is impossible. This is a thesis novel, touching real individuals; the home lives of staff and employers are presented in detail and with sympathy. The picture drawn is familiar; no solution of the economic problem posed is suggested." Bkl.

Published in England under title: Wreck of the Grosvenor

"The Grosvenor, an East Indian trading vessel, was homeward bound to London in 1782 when she was shipwrecked off the coast of South Africa. Crew and passengers, numbering over a hundred, got to shore with food and supplies and set out to walk to Capetown. Soon the party split into two groups for caution's sake. The rest of the story is concerned with the group that followed the coast down to Capetown. Nothing was ever heard of those who took an inland course. After undergoing months of privation and hunger and trouble with African tribes, a mere handful of men, more dead than alive, staggered into civilization." Book rev. digest

* Dusty answer. Holt 1927 355p o.p. 1941

"The story of an English girl, an only child, whose playmates are the children next door. The story follows the group from childhood to early maturity. As they grow up the three boys fall in love with Judith, each in his fashion, but she wants only the middle one, Roddy, whom she idealizes out of all semblance to his real self. Her disillusionment is sudden, jarring. A college friendship . . . ends in much the same way. And then death takes from Judith the proffered security of marriage to Martin, the youngest of the boys—so that to all her eager questionings life gives a 'dusty answer.'" Book rev. digest

"The chief English translation is that based on Smollett's, 1749, and still called after him, though freely revised and much improved by B. H. Malkin, whose text is followed in this edition."
"Both the form of this masterpiece of picaresque romance and the characters and incidents were borrowed from Spain. It portrays all sides of life and all classes of people, in a series of changing scenes, incident to the hero's adventurous career as he rises stage by stage from the condition of valet to that of confidant of the prime minister of Spain. A 'comedy in a hundred acts,' it has been justly called, the humour being too good-natured and tolerant to be described as satire." Baker's Best Stories "put into the mouth of the 'Old Cattleman,' a gentleman of infinite leisure, a tolerant philosophy, and a language all his own. Though containing little that is original, they belong to the best tradition of American humorous story-telling. "A brief, well-written and scary story about how it feels to fall off a ship in the middle of the Pacific and remain alive some eighteen hours before drowning. But his account is persuasive, his description of a gentleman from Yale in an undignified position is agreeably satirical, and he has a nice sense of climax." New Yorker trader, brought his wife, daughter of an Ojibway chief, late in the 1700's. This chronicle of the Johnston family is in reality a panorama of the varied and romantic life of the North as it developed through the ensuing century. Many names famous in history appear, and through its crowded pages flash authentic and unforgettable descriptions of land, water, and changing seasons. While of limited appeal as a novel, because of its sustained chronological style and the solid appearance of the pages, it is a fine example of regional history, delightfully presented." Bkl.

First published 1933 by Doubleday

"The glimpse of Ann as a child reveals the qualities that dominated her life—intelligent curiosity, an enormous capacity for work, fearless analysis of motives, including her own, and a sense of fair play that made her lend her aid in righting the wrongs of the underdogs of society. In the course of this long biographical novel, Ann finds outlet for her energetic leadership in suffrage, in social settlement work, dispenser for a private philanthropist, and finally in prison reform. The latter phase occupies the large and final portion of the book. Paralleling her driving interest in social reform is the longing for love and the desire to bear a child to atone to her body and her spirit for an abortion in her early youth. And even the bitter irony of the fulfillment of these desires does not alter Ann's straight look on life. Appeared in part in the 'Red book.' " Bkl.

y 1941

"Sinclair Lewis has drawn a full-length figure of a physician, a born seeker and experimentalist. He follows Martin Arrowsmith from medical school thru experiences as general country practitioner, as health officer and clinician, as fighter of the plague on a West Indian island and finally, as director of a medical institute. He marries twice. His first wife is both playmate and helpmate, who ministers to his genius and puts up with his egotism. His second wife, rich and exacting, tries to make him a fashionable scientist, and failing in the attempt, divorces him. The book leaves Arrowsmith in the Vermont woods working with a fellow-spirit as an independent researcher." Book rev. digest

* Dodsworth; a novel. Harcourt 1929 377p $1.49

"A story of an American business man traveling in Europe with his wife, to whom he is devoted, while she regards herself as his superior. There is the usual comedy over American crudities, but besides Lewis's customary satire there is a sympathetic character portrayal far in advance of his former novels" Chicago

Elmer Gantry. Harcourt 1927 432p o.p. 1941

"A long journalistic novel, which paints a black picture of an evangelist and his sensational career. The indictment, however, is not only of demagogues, but of the men and women who listen to demagogues—an indictment of hypocrisy and unintelligence, wherever found. By the violence of his attack, the author has weakened his effect" Bkl.

Prodigal parents; a novel. Sun dial 301p 69c (W)

First published 1939 by Doubleday

"Fred Cornplow's college-trained daughter was hobnobbing with a communist agitator and his magazine; his son, handsome, dumb, hard-drinking, left college to get a job—a different one every week. It was the 'age of youth,' they pointed out. When Fred wanted to retire, travel with his wife, and live his own life, the children were horrified; he should stick to business. They needed father's money and influence to keep them comfortable. The story of Fred and his wife has many human and popular touches but the children, communist, and psychiatrist are only puppets. Surprisingly Mr. Lewis now eulogizes a Babbitt." Bkl.

"This saga of a Jewish family begins in 1840, in Poland, where Reb Mendel ben Reb Jizchock taught children their Hebrew letters. Mendel's grandson, Jacob, emigrated to New York in the 70's and here the family rises to affluence. Jacob's son Arthur, graduates at Columbia, studies medicine, marries a Gentile and becomes a practising psychiatrist. But he cannot become an Americanized Jew and fuse himself with our civilization. He cannot disown his heritage and tradition. Finally, after an intense struggle within himself Arthur leaves his Christian-born wife and his children and goes on a Jewish mission to the Balkans." Last days of Shylock; with drawings by Arthur Szyk. Harper 1931 222p o.p. 1941

"An imaginary reconstruction of the life of Shylock, the Jew telling what happened to him from the point where we take leave of him in Shakespeare's play. The novel, in a more subtle sense, is a psychological portrayal of the mental adventures and experiences of the persecuted elderly Jew. Shylock in his lonely house recalls the scenes of his boyhood and the terrible afflictions of his race. We are given also the story of his baptism, his flight from Venice to Stamboul, his work as a Zionist, his succoring the persecuted in Crete, and his final reunion with his daughter Jessica and her sons." Stephen Escott. Harper 1930 315p o.p. 1941

Trumpet of jubilee; a novel. Harper 1937 345p o.p. 1941

"In telling the tragic story of Kurt Weiss, a modern German Jew who was murdered by the fascists and of his wife and child who fled to France and then to America, the author expresses his feelings of hate and bitterness towards the anti-Semitic atrocities of fascist Germany. The less effective second half of the book combines the story of the murdered man's son, Gabriel Weiss, with a prophecy of things to come from 1940 to 1950, and the author's ideas of the evils that encompass the world. A novel with depth, although the characters are sharply defined as good or evil according to their agreement with the principles of the author. Frank language; some gross situations." Bkl.

London bridge is falling. Little 1934 389p o.p. 1941

"An historical novel based on Cade's rebellion in London in the year 1450. Two women in love with the same man furnish the slender plot. The main interest, however, is in the domestic life, the superstitions, the brutalities, the loves, and the lusts of a dozen or more families dwelling in squalid rooms above the shops which lined both sides of London bridge. The moving drama which passed over the cobbles of the rickety Bridge—the pageants, fêtes, weddings, assassinations, and armies—is realistically pictured. Thus the book is a series of vivid 'street scenes' of mid-fifteenth century London." Bkl.

Rough road. Dodd 1918 346p o.p. 1941
"James Marmaduke Trevor, contemptuously nicknamed Doggie, has been pampered from boyhood by his mother. . . Then comes the war, and Doggie, persuaded to enlist, has shivers of horror. . . Reluctantly he accepts a commission, but is soon dismissed, because of his incompetency. Doggie now realizes a few bitter truths about himself, and fiercely resolves that, in spite of everything, he will make himself a man, in the truest sense. He enlists as a Tommy, merges himself without reserve into a Tommy's life and class, becomes a good soldier, and finds his soul." Book rev digest

Septimus. Dodd 1909 315p $2.50

Stella Maris; illus. by Frank Wiles. Dodd 1913 357p $2.50

A sentimental story of an invalid girl seeing the world only thru the eyes of devoted relatives and friends who shield her from all reality. The crux of the tale is her unexpected recovery which allows her to see the real world and its necessary evils. Although a murder and suicide occur in the closing pages, this is not a tragedy—far from it! Stella is able to choose the noblest of her two devoted admirers and is promised long and lasting happiness

Colin Lowrie. Knopf 1939 393p $2.50 (W)

Also available from Grosset at $1

Follows the adventurous career of a red-haired Scot, Colin Lowrie, forced to leave Scotland after the Jacobite rebellion of '45. He was sold into slavery in the West Indies but escaped after ten years and fled again, this time to Virginia. In Virginia he tried to run his own plantation, but failing in that, he returned to Scotland to restore his ancestral home. In each episode of his story some woman dominates the scene—from the Negro Cassie of the West Indies to the passionate Eulalia in Virginia

 * Black Angels. Day 1926 296p o.p. 1941
 "The story of a musical family who tour the straggling towns of Minnesota territory in a caravan. Reproduces much of the local color and history of the time." Wis. bul y Charming Sally, a novel. Day 1932 311p o.p. 1941
 "Mrs. Lovelace has woven romance about the first theatrical company to venture to America. Hallam's Comedians, who landed in Yorktown in 1752. The account of their brilliant reception in Virginia and the contrasting coldness of the northern colonies seems to be founded on fact and based on a careful study of records. For some readers it may overshadow in interest the story of pretty Meg Palmer, who finds a champion for herself and her nameless child in Joel Ridgway, sturdy young Philadelphia Quaker." Wis. bul
 y Early candlelight. Day 1929 322p o.p. 1941
 "This story of old Fort Snelling in Minnesota is notable for its rich and vital presentation of the frontier. The story interest is well sustained and the romance of Delia DuGay, born in a squatter's cabin outside the walls of the fort, and Jasper Page, New England aristocrat, will insure its popularity, but it is the many other characters—Indians, traders, voyagers, officers, missionaries, all moving through the book as in a pageant,—that give it its distinctive quality." Wis. bul
 y Petticoat court. Day 1930 318p $2
 "A gay story centering about bewitching Chloé Peyroux from New Orleans, a loyal young Southerner who becomes a favorite at the court of Napoleon III and Eugénie, and intercedes with the Emperor and Empress to grant French support to the Confederacy, for which her elderly husband is fighting. The best parts of the book are the spirited descriptions of the court life of the Second Empire, with the Empress Eugénie as its central figure." Cleveland

Gentlemen from England. Macmillan 1937 361p $2.50
"In the decade following the Civil war a colony of English gentry settled in Crockett county, Minnesota. They had been led to believe that a fortune could be made by bean farming, little knowing the difficulties of the situation. This provides the background for the story of Richard Chalmers, one of the English settlers, whose lot it was to become involved with one woman and to fall in love with another." Book rev. digest
One stayed at Welcome. Day 1934 311p $2.50
"A story of pioneering days in Minnesota after the close of the Mexican war. The first settlers of Welcome are Dan from New England and Larry from Kentucky. Their first discord came when they fell in love with the same girl, but their difficulties were solved when the town was threatened by fire, and they both fought to save it." Book rev. digest

Legacy. Norton 1934 339p $2.50
"A story of family life and farm life in Wisconsin in the years before the Great war. The Pelletiers, descendants of a French voyageur and his Indian wife, are in their family prime when the story opens, but with the death of old Louis Pelletier, troubles come upon them. The farm is lost, and eventually Louis Edger-ton, old Louis' grandson, sees that his 'legacy' lies in the tradition of his fore-fathers and not in the land." Book rev. digest

Conquering seas. Longmans 1935 279p o.p. 1941
"A good English sea story about North Sea trawlers, especially the 'Adventurer', and the powerful commercial fisheries company which owned the fleet. "Mr Lubbock has given us an authentic picture of the real, underlying, essential Rome, without ever describing it at all... The writer drifts about in different societies, semi-Italian and English, and encounters many different kinds of people drawn by the magnet of Rome. The perfectly mannered English Jesuit; the old lady, the descendant of English squires, in her Palazzo; the cultivated but not very learned authoress. All these people reflect Rome from different angles unconsciously." Spectator

"A story of life on a huge rubber plantation in Sumatra, owned by an American company but largely run by young Dutchmen, ambitious to build up a fortune quickly and return to Holland. The principal characters are Frank Versteegh and his wife Marian, whose strong mutual love enable them to withstand the degenerating influences, first of tropical life, and secondly of the wild spending and alcoholic excesses which follow in the wake of the growing success of the company. The crash in Wall street brings an end to the enormous profits and Frank and Marian are sent home to Holland, without their fortune but secure in their love." Book

Long night. Bobbs 1936 331p o.p. 1941

"A hair-raising, psychological story, laid in Alabama and Georgia, relating an innocent man's persecution by a grapevine gang, his murder, and his son's crusade of vengeance. The Civil war and especially the battle of Shiloh are described at length and rather over-balance the story. The civilized brutality of war contrasted with the primitive killing of fifteen men for vengeance, as well as his ultimate growth of character, lead the son to forego his revenge." Bkl.

"An historical novel of Tasmania. The story of the island's development is unfolded with the history of some half-dozen families of aristocratic stock whose inter-marriages with one another and with later settlers laid the foundation of present-day Tasmania. The author has had access not only to historical data, but to family memoirs and island traditions which have enabled her to resurrect the life of the pioneers with fidelity. The heart is a lonely hunter. Houghton 1940 356p $2.50

"The story has for its scene a southern town and covers in time about a year in the recent past. Its chief character is one John Singer, a deaf mute, who, when the story opens loses his only friend, another mute, committed to an insane hospital. Forced to listen and not to talk, Singer becomes the recipient of the confidences of several other residents of the town—the proprietor of a quick-lunch counter, a little girl, an intellectual Negro doctor, a half-crazy, drunken radical" Book rev. digest

Men of Kildonan; a romance of the Selkirk settlers. Doran 1926 276p o.p. 1941

"An historical novel written about the migration of the Selkirk settlers from Kildonan in Scotland to Assinibola in Canada. Driven out of Kildonan by political troubles, several Scottish families embarked for the new country under agents of the Earl of Selkirk. Arrived in Western Canada, the natural difficulties of pioneering were increased tenfold by the harshness of the agents who had brought them there, and by the active enmity of the Northwest Company." Three students. Knopf 1926 351p o.p. 1941

"An absorbing tale of eleventh century Persia which centers about the lives of three historic figures, Omar Khayyam, Nizam ul-Mulk and Hassan ben Sabbah who were students together at Nishapur. Tradition says that the three made a solemn vow that whichever first should attain to fortune should share his success with the other two. The talented Nizam ul-Mulk rose rapidly to the position of Grand vizier, second only in authority to the king. Mindful of his pledge, he would have raised Omar Khayyam to a position of power but yielded to Omar's preference for an annual stipend that would enable him to pursue his researches and think his thoughts in peace. Hassan, however did not hesitate to press his claims and was granted a high position at court which he speedily abused. Exiled from Persia he became king of the outlaws and founder of the order of assassins (as-Hassans). It is a realistic picture of the vast Persian empire of the time and of the splendors and perils of a brilliant oriental court." Cleveland

* Harbormaster; a novel. Doubleday 1931 439p o.p. 1941

"This author, who is often compared with Conrad, tells his story in Conradian manner, at second hand, through the lips of one who has been a more or less impartial observer of events. Mr. Spenlove, the chief engineer on a cruising steamer, is in the habit of entertaining the passengers at his table with bits of adventure drawn from his long experience at sea. An event on shore in a Caribbean port—the death of Mrs. Fraley and the suicide of her husband, the harbormaster—starts him off on the long narrative of the strange life of this storm-tossed pair as he had known it. Long, but of absorbing interest to those who like the method." Wis. bul.

No castle in Spain. Doubleday 1933 415p o.p. 1941

"The actual story is slight. A sophisticated New York man, representative of an oil company, is drawn into adventures outside of his business in Colombo when he helps a young American girl, whom he had known in New York, to run away from her husband. She had married a member of the old nobility whose feudal family life proved unbearable to an independent, modern girl. The New York man, a connoisseur of women, tells the tale in a philosophical vein, familiar to McFee's readers. The author knows the country and its people thoroughly and, while this is not his best work, it is enjoyable." Bkl.

Pilgrims of adversity. Doubleday 1928 443p o.p. 1941

"A long and closely packed story of a group of officers and engineers on board the tramp steamer, Candleshoe, sailing from Scotland to 'Puerto Balboa, Costaragua.' All these characters, each moved by his secret dreams or something in his past, become involved in a Central American Revolution as instruments of European financiers, and the destiny of each is determined in the political upheaval." Race. Doubleday 1924 398p o.p. 1941

"A picture of life in a London suburb, in the closing decades of the last century. There is a crowded background of characters but before the story progresses far the interest begins to center in four of them—two of the seven daughters of the Heath family, Hazel and Lena, and Francis Striker . . . who comes home from school in Germany bringing a French schoolmate, Louis Chailu, with him. It is the development of these young people and their ambitions that forms the . . . interest of the story." Book rev digest

Journey proud. Macmillan 1939 397p $2.50

"The Civil war enters this story but it is not the main interest. While it is the cause for the loss of fortune and property at the close, and for great anxiety and sorrow during four years, young George Mackay, who goes to war, is the hero, and the novel is one of character rather than war. George's father and mother, the many relatives, and the rich life of the tobacco plantation 'Fairfield' at Charlotte, Virginia, are presented in warm, vivid writing." Bkl.

The terror; a mystery. McBride 1917 227p o.p. 1941

"An ingenious mystery story, impossible, fantastic, yet with a moral that sets thoughtful people musing. Rural England which is the scene has a succession of strange deaths. . . . The theory is suggested that the Germans, before the war, undermined the earth, and, from hidden vantage points, are making use of some deadly ray to destroy the people. In the end it is revealed that the terror had been due to a mute uprising of the brute creation against their human masters who, in descending to the plane of beasts to conduct warfare, had released their spiritual hold over the animal creation." Heaven's dooryard. Farrar 1940 308p $2.50

"A pleasant enough story of a settlement in Maine in the 1840's. The young hero, Jonathan Chadbourne, accompanied by a picturesque companion, Peleg Jones, ex-revolutionary soldier, comes up from Massachusetts in search of a hill-top farm. He finds what he wants and also an enemy in the person of the villainous rich man who had wanted the same piece of land. In spite of the villain, the book never becomes very exciting; it will be read with most enjoyment as a country idyl in which a love story and the beauty of scenery blend." Wis. bul.

Ferment. Farrar 1937 403p o.p. 1941

"A story of strike-breaking and labor-racketeering in Philadelphia, in which the chief characters are labor spies, informers, and their bosses. The theme is the futility of the little man's struggle against the evils of industrialism and particularly against Fascism, which is represented as a vague, sinister force, as yet scarcely recognizable. A triangular love story concerning two brothers in love with the same girl furnishes the dramatic element in the plot." Book rev. digest

Trader's wife, illus. by André Durencean. Coward-McCann 1930 158p illus $2

"A poignant story with an African setting, told with fine restraint. It tells of a New England girl who marries an ex-trader and goes with him to live on the West African Coast; of her love for her new home, its strange sights and primitive living conditions, and the black people; and finally of the wrecking of a noble character by the hopeless brutalities of the slave trade. Appeared in the 'Atlantic Monthly.'" Bkl.

"A slow-moving and plotless study of the years following the Civil war. Tyler Peck, a Kentuckian whose three brothers are in the Union army, is the one member of his family with Confederate sympathies. Unable to fight for the South, he has moved into the Wabash valley in Indiana to be out of touch with the conflict. The story is one of the daily life of farm and neighborhood, the birth of children, and the adjustments of marriage, and is told with a fine sense of reality in characters and scenes, but at times with realism that offends some readers." Roofs of Elm street; a tale of the Middle West. Putnam 1936 378p $2.50

"Portrays the Middle West as it developed. Three men, friends and business associates, came to North Star, a small village in Minnesota: Bradley Craver, doctor; Otto Schultz, lawyer; and Hugh O'Neil, lumber dealer. When after long sacrifices and hard work the rich returns came, they built Elm Street, and there after fifty years the destinies of the three families crossed and recrossed. A most enjoyable and entertaining novel." Ontario library review

Northern sunrise; a novel; tr by Barrows
 Mussey Reynal 1939 272p o.p. 1941

"It is the fresh picture of the long winter night in the small arctic village of northern Norway and later of the constant daylight that makes this novel different. The story is usual enough, with a psychological twist. While flying over the country, two aviators crash, and one is killed. Because of an affair with the dead man's wife, the living aviator suffers from a sense of guilt, but his balance is restored by a new and more healthy love." Bkl.

* Young Henry of Navarre; tr. from the German by Eric Sutton. Knopf 1937 585p $3

Also obtainable from Grosset at $1.29

"Beginning when Henry of Navarre was ten years old, this historical novel relates in great detail the general confusion of the times, the struggles for Protestantism made by his mother, Jeanne d'Albret . . . the ever-present plots and counterplots, the massacres of St. Bartholomew, the many love affairs, and the wars which led ultimately to the crowning, in 1589, of Henry as King of France. An accomplished piece of work, with excellent characterization, which nevertheless produces the effect of rambling towards the end. . . . "This is the third part of the series of which the first volume was Joseph and His Brothers and the second Young Joseph. . . . Departing in some respects from the thirty-ninth Chapter of Genesis, these further records of Joseph's life start with his rescue from the pit by the Ishmaelite merchant's caravan. The story continues with his trip thru the marvels of Egypt to the vast estate of Potiphar where he rises from a lowly slave to become overseer and confidant of the master. The sinful love of Potiphar's wife, here called Mut-em-enet, for the chaste Joseph, his

"The plot is negligible. Hans Castorp, a young engineer, comes . . . to Davos-Platz, high up in the Alps, to visit his cousin, a patient in the sanatorium for tuberculars. At first he takes the cure as a visitor, but after discovering that he, too, is diseased, he stays on as a patient for seven years. The outbreak of the World war causes him to leave" Cleveland staff notes

"The book is much more than a discussion of the effects of disease in an isolated group; it is a tremendous philosophical and prophetic treatise." Bkl.

- y A man and his dog. Knopf 1930 258p o.p. 1941

"Bashan was the author's short-haired setter, and the book records their walks and experiences. One reviewer says it is important, chiefly for the glimpses it gives of Mann himself. Published in Germany with the title 'Herr und hund' and in this country in 1923 as 'Bashan and I.'" Bkl.

- Mario and the magician; tr. from the German by H. T. Lowe-Porter. Knopf 1931 81p o.p. 1941

"The story is a delicate, yet powerful, satire upon the types of people who frequent one of those bungalow resorts which, upon the Italian coast as elsewhere, have grown up around the quiet fishing villages of yesterday. It culminates in the exciting account of an evening's entertainment in the beach pavilion, in which a conjuror, starting upon bad terms with his patrons, gradually insinuates himself with them, until at last he can hypnotize them at will." A "translation of Italy's great historical romance . . . based upon Manzoni's final revision of the book. The story tells of Renzo and Lucia, peasant lovers. They are about to be married when Father Abbondino, the priest who is to officiate at the ceremony, is threatened with death by Don Rodrigo and his bandits, for Don Rodrigo is desirous of claiming Lucia for himself. Lucia thereupon enters a convent and prepares to become a nun but relinquishes her vows when a pestilence attacks the city, killing Don Rodrigo and restoring Renzo to her." Book rev. digest

"The scene of this starkly realistic novel, written by a French negro . . . is laid in French Congo. The author calls it a series of etchings. It is almost without plot, the character of Batouala the mokoundji, chief of many villages, serving to bind together these pictures of savage Africa. With extraordinary vividness the surroundings and physical conditions of the native's life are sketched, his sloth and sensuality." Book rev. digest

River of skulls. Penn 1936 311p front o p 1941

"This novel is concerned with the fortunes of young Alan Cameron, his Indian companion Noel, and their team of Ungava dogs, as they accompany John McCord and his daughter, Heather, on a hunt for gold in the heart of Ungava land." Boston Transcript

Whelps of the wolf; frontispiece by F. E. Schoonover. Penn 1922 303p front o p 1941

"Jean Marcel, the young trapper, sets out for the Esquimaux village on the edge of the Arctic to buy a husky dog team, passing through the unpeopled barrens, where no Indians nor half-breeds will go because they fear the evil spirit, the Windigo, which haunts those solitudes. Jean fears neither man nor ghost; he wins through, and by saving the life of an Esquimaux boy secures a single husky pup, the pick of a notable litter. This dog, Fleur, accompanies him throughout the rest of his adventures—such adventures as were commonplace to him." N.Y. Tribune

Continues the author's previous novel "The Thibaults." "This volume comprises the three French volumes entitled 'L'été' and a fourth volume entitled 'Epilogue'"

"This new volume . . . follows Antoine, the doctor, now owner of the house and the mantle of his father—and Jacques, younger son who had run away from it all and turned socialist and journalist in Switzerland. Both are dissatisfied emotionally—but Jacques eventually finds his fate linked with his Jenny too late to do them any good." Kirkus

* The Thibaults; tr. by Stuart Gilbert. Viking 1939 871p $3 (W)

"The original work was published in France in separate volumes from 1922 to 1936. This omnibus volume contains the first six parts of the work." Ontario library review

The Thibaults are a French family in pre-war Paris, the father a pillar of society, the older son a rising young doctor, the younger, a romantic adventurer who wants to be a writer. Thru the gradual unfolding of their story, from the sons' adolescence to the father's death, the author brings to life a whole world of aspirations and human behavior

Black valley; a romance of the Argentine, by Hugo Wast [pseud]; tr. by Herman and Miriam Hespelt. Longmans 1928 302p o.p. 1941

"A romance of the Argentine which describes the progress and tragic culmination of a bitter feud between two powerful land owners. It is notable for the author's 'picture of the wild foothills of the Andes, and his study of the primitive society of mountaineers and peons and imperious overlords of the land.'" Cleveland

This novel was awarded the Royal Spanish Academy prize

Peach blossom, by Hugo Wast [pseud]; tr. from the Spanish by Herman and Miriam Hespelt. Longmans 1929 300p o.p. 1941

"A tragic idyll in a comparatively new setting, the mountainous district of the Argentine, a background depicted with fidelity and interest. It is the old story of beautiful, devoted peasant girl; selfish, thoughtless young aristocrat; proud, taciturn old peasant father, and faithful peasant lover, driven to madness by his

Basilissa; a tale of the Empress Theodora. Macmillan 1940 307p $2.50

(W)

"A romanticized story based on the life of Theodora, Empress of the East, who, in her youth, was an actress and courtesan of Constantinople. After retiring from the stage and reforming her conduct, she gained the affection of Justinian, who later married her and proclaimed her Empress and his equal colleague in a reign of unprecedented splendor." Hunting

* Bird of dawning; or, The fortune of the sea Macmillan 1933 310p $2.50

"An exciting tale of a sailing ship race between tea-clippers in the China trade in the '60's. After three days of torture in an open boat, the fifteen survivors of the wrecked 'Blackgauntlet,' under command of Cruiser Trewsbury, second mate, find the mysteriously abandoned 'Bird of Dawning' and sail her to London, winning the race and the prize. The thrills and dangers of sea-going in the old sailing days are vividly pictured." Wis. bul.

y Taking of the Gry. Macmillan 1934 193p $1.75

"The Gry . . . was loaded with munitions and was most essential to the success of the Nationalist party in this story of a civil war in a phantom Central American republic 1911. The climax of the tale is reached in the account of the capture of the Gry by a young English sailor and another dare-devil, describing how they succeeded in getting the ship away from the guardian crew, and brought it safely thru a supposedly impassable channel which had been unused since Drake's day." Book rev. digest

y Victorious Troy; or, The Hurrying Angel. Macmillan 1935 308p $2.50

"Disregarding a sinister sky and sea, the drunken captain of the Hurrying Angel drives his gramladen sailing ship from Melbourne straight across the path of a cyclone; and the menace and fury of the storm with its terrible toll of damage and loss are described with all a poet's power and intensity and with the authenticity of an experienced seaman. How 18-year-old Dick Pomfret finally brings the ship to port is related in letters and newspaper reports. This stirring tale of peril, courage and resourcefulness is of special appeal to men and older boys." N.Y. libraries

Up at the villa. Doubleday 1941 209p $1.75

"It is a decisive moment of her life, for Mary Panton, freed from an unhappy marriage, is weighing the advantages of life as the wife of a man who has become governor of a state in India. He offers wealth and position, but he is of her father's generation. She is about to accept when she is carried away by momentary compassion for a refugee artist and takes him to her villa for the night; her indiscretion has unforeseen tragic results. Serialized under the title 'The villa on the hill.'" Bkl.

Pierre and Jean; tr. from the French by Clara Bell; with a critical introduction by the Earl of Crewe. Appleton-Century lxvii, 237p illus o.p. 1941

First published in French in 1888

"A sombre and tragic study of bourgeois life, the tale of two brothers, one of whom is suddenly led to suspect that the other is the child of his mother's adultery. With infinite reluctance he compels himself to follow up the inquiry, while the mother, impassive and remorseful, awaits the discovery of her guilt. A superb example of Maupassant's faculty for observing the infinite details of life and reproducing them with unerring artistic fidelity." Baker's Best

Thérèse; tr. by Eric Sutton. Liveright 1928 208p $2.50

"A complete unfolding of the mind of a neurotic woman. In the opening scene Thérèse leaves court acquitted of poisoning her husband. It is his testimony which has saved her. On the way to the family estate near Bordeaux, Thérèse explores her mind back to childhood, searching an explanation of the deed to offer her husband. That explanation is never given; for the family decrees that [she] must live the life of a recluse, in the eyes of the community, a little mad." Book rev digest

Family circle; tr. by Hamish Miles. Appleton-Century 1932 330p $2 50

"The theme of the story is the warping of a girl's personality thru her knowledge of her mother's infidelity to her husband. Denise Herpain develops into a beautiful and keenly intelligent, but neurotic woman. She loves, marries, and herself turns faithless to her husband. After much emotional torment and bafflement Denise finds her bearings, tests the security of her marriage and French family solidarity, linking herself finally to the family circle. The scene is a small textile manufacturing town in [Northern France]." Book rev. digest

"The intimate family life of a Midwest, middle-class family about 1918 is presented through the thoughts and feelings of three people—a boy of eight, his brother of twelve, and the father. Although practically without plot, it achieves a sensitive characterization of the mother whose understanding, humor, and graciousness smoothed their lives until she died. The characterization is unusually successful, but the book will interest chiefly cultivated readers." Bkl

Across the dark river; a novel. Doubleday 1939 339p $2.50 (W)

"This is the story of little men, an innkeeper, a tailor, a Rabbi, a cobbler, etc., and the days they lived through—but for the most part could not survive, when Hitler came into Austria. Losing all they had, they are driven from Germany, refused harbor in Czechoslovakia, and finally find a temporary refuge on a barge on the Danube, the band of forty odd, now dwindled down to a handful. Death and deportation soon solved the issue." Kirkus

Putnam 1930 290p $2

"Riechtenburg, a little kingdom mythically bordering on Austria, has two claimants to its throne, while the aged Prince Nicholas is dying; they are Duke Paul and Duke Johann. Duke Paul is an arrogant fool, but his fiancée, the beautiful Grand Duchess Léonie, is worthy the brave assistance that two gallant young Englishmen, Richard Chandos and George Hanbury, give her. Richard and the Duchess Léonie fall in love, and after Léonie succeeds, for political reasons, in planting Duke Paul on the throne, she breaks her engagement and runs off to England with Richard." Gale warning, by Dornford Yates (pseud.)
Putnam 1940 280p $2

"A delightfully irresponsible adventure thriller. The author describes a chase with a murder at the end of it, and takes his readers minutely and carefully over southern France in an expensive car. It's all expensive, in fact, and rather light-hearted and amusing." New Yorker

Adventures of Harry Richmond Scribner 569p o.p. 1941

First published 1871

"A kaleidoscopic story—changing from country to town, from England to Germany—the personages equally multifarious. . . . Peculiarly rich in imaginative descriptions of country and town, of sea and forest, both in England and on the Continent. All is seen through the eyes and imagination of Harry, the hero whose personality is being developed through trial and defeat." Baker's Best

Amazing marriage. Scribner 646p $1.60

First published 1895

"An unorthodox treatment of a marriage problem. Carinthia, 'the Whitechapel Countess,' one of the noblest of his tragic figures, is married precipitately and then neglected by a cynical young earl, whose remorse and unavailing efforts to win her back make a sardonic comedy. Woodseer is said to be a sketch of R. L. Stevenson; he is the customary sayer of epigrams. The book is rich in word-landscapes of Alpine scenery, etc." Baker's Best

Beauchamp's career. Scribner 527p $1.60

First published 1876

"Beauchamp, the Radical . . . is a chivalrous and impetuous champion of the oppressed; and his history gives a broad view of the politics of mid-century England in the light of Carlyle's teaching. Entwined with the comedy of politics is the comedy of love set forth in the emotional history of Beauchamp, who is successively enamoured of three women." Baker's Best

* Diana of the crossways; a novel. Scribner 415p $1.60

Also obtainable from Modern lib. at 95c
First published 1885

"A study of character and emotion in which a beautiful and gifted woman comes through varied experiences of love and matrimony to happiness at the end. It is full of both comedy and passion and is direct, dramatic and vivacious. The character of Diana was modeled from the Hon. Caroline Norton, a poet and beauty who was conspicuous in London society in the early part of the nineteenth century." Pratt alcove

* Egoist; a comedy in narrative. Scribner 523p o.p. 1941

First published 1879

"A brilliant comedy in the form of a novel in which is pictured the arch-egoist, Sir Willoughby Patterne. The book glitters with philosophical fancies and wit, and in Clara Middleton and Vernon Whitford, we have two of Meredith's finest characters." Pratt alcove

Evan Harrington; a novel. . . Scribner xxix, 472p (Modern student's lib) $1

First published 1861

"The son of a fashionable tailor, brought up in aristocratic tastes and associations, suddenly finds himself saddled with the responsibility of his father's debts. On one side is duty, on the other his love for a well-born maiden. How Evan comes through the ordeal, happily, yet without abjuring his manhood, is the main business of a sustained comedy in which the subtle conflict of class prejudice is developed with infinite humour. . . . The book is largely

Lord Ormont and his Aminta, a novel. Scribner 1894 354p $1.60

Drastic in its handling of the marriage question, and . . . revolutionary. The old lord, a man who has not 'rounded Seraglio Point,' drives his wife into the arms of her lover, the loyal and practical Weyburn. Hero and heroine strive against a passion that infringes human, but not, the author pleads, divine law. The old story of Lord Peterborough and Anastasia Robinson is said to have suggested the plot." ‡ Ordeal of Richard Feverel Scribner 455p $1.60

First published 1859

"This novel . . . is written with a thoughtful purpose. It is full of poetic beauty and keen epigram. It is primarily a story of father and son. The father, though a man of fine intelligence and noble aims, through his fatal pedantry brings ruin and misery to the son he loves." Pratt alcove

Rhoda Fleming Scribner 416p $1.60

First published 1885

"A simple, intensely dramatic story of middle-class people: the heroine is the daughter of a yeoman, the hero a farmer. In the rustic scenes, farmers and their women-folk, pot-house company and over-fed labourers, furnish plenty of low comedy. But the main action is serious, culminating in scenes of heartfelt tragedy, even though the dramatic stress is alleviated at the end." Baker's Best

Birth of the gods; tr. from the Russian by N. A. Duddington. Dutton 1926 233p o.p. 1941

"Taking for the theme of his story the love of a Babylonian merchant for a virgin priestess, the author . . . has provided a fictional vehicle for a tedious account of the religious myths and mysteries of the ancient inhabitants of the Island of Crete. In the introduction . . . the author explicitly states that the mystery of Christ was concealed in paganism and revealed in Christianity—the mystery of 'God who dies and rises again from the dead.'" Sat. rev. of lit

A "drama of Corsican life, into which is precipitated the sense of beauty and strangeness that seems to belong to this land, where assassination is still a recognized means of settling differences. Colomba is a young Corsican in whom the vendetta spirit is incarnate, while her brother, who ought to avenge his father's death, is Parisianized and emancipated from ancestral barbarism. Quaint companions; with an introduction by H. G. Wells. Dutton 1924 299p $2.50

"Mr Merrick presents the theme of racial miscegenation. His story tells of the love of Elisha Lee, a famous negro tenor, for an Englishwoman. Mrs Harris, a restless and discontented blond, toys with the affections of Elisha. Then because he can give her what she wants—escape for her and her son from boarding houses to gaudy living—she finally marries him. . . . A mulatto boy is born to them. The mother cannot abide her colored son, while the boy is everything to Elisha. The repugnance, prejudice and clash of mixed color is dramatized. . . . Mr Merrick goes on with the next generation taking up the story of David, the ugly duckling, goaded by his swanky unpleasant half-brother Vivian" N.Y. Times

Catalogue, a novel. Harcourt 1936 279p $2

"One hot August day the Fall-Winter catalogs of two large mail-order houses arrived together at the post-office of a little town in Oklahoma. It meant work for the post-office people, and it caused the editor of the town's paper to write an article on 'buying at home,' but the people of the town and the farms gloated over the contents of the catalogs and sent in their orders. This episodic novel tells the stories and reveals the motives of many of the purchases." Book rev. digest

* Lamb in his bosom. Harper 1933 345p
o p. 1941

"A quiet chronicle of isolated, hard-working people on a Georgia farm in the years preceding the Civil war. It is the story of Cean Carver from girlhood to old age, and it is concerned with elemental things—weather, hard time, births, and deaths—all accepted with the matter-of-fact realism of the pioneer, but related with a warmth that surmounts the deliberately slow-moving style of the prose." Miller, Mrs May (Merrill)

First the blade. Knopf 1938 631p $3 (W)

"Its first half is Civil War, its second half pioneer, or at least frontier, since it deals with English-speaking Americans in California. Missouri, a border state torn into factions, where the Civil War was a guerilla affair . . . is the scene of the historical half. The story is of an engaging family of Southern sympathies, with a growing girl as heroine." Book-of-the-month club news

Miller of Old Church. Glasgow, E. A. G.

Millin, Mrs Sarah Gertrude (Liebson) 1889-

Coming of the Lord. Liveright 1928 284p o.p. 1941

"A dramatic novel of South Africa in which prejudice, Kafir religious superstition, and racial hatred are presented with effective realism. Twenty-five hundred religion-mad Kafirs camp above the little town of Gibeon to await the coming of the Lord. A Vigilance committee is formed to drive them away and it is the reaction of Jew, Boer, Briton, Indian, and Kafir in this bitter race conflict that makes the story and leads to its tragic climax." Bkl

Dark gods; a novel. Harper 1941 296p $2 50 (W)

The story of a black tribe in South Africa, of white men who befriended them, of others who hated them, and of the Nazis from the North who used the superstitions of the blacks to further the cause of a strange new God called Hitler

The fiddler. Harper 1929 256p o.p. 1941

"A young Englishwoman on holiday with her husband in Lourenço Marques, falls in love with the violinist of the hotel orchestra. Swept by an impulse new and strange this gentle virginal soul urges the violinist—a man of heart and conscience, but weak of will—to take her away. They leave together for Johannesburg, and tragedy goes with them." Book rev. digest

God's stepchildren. Liveright 1924 319p o.p. 1941

"'God's stepchildren' are the half-castes of South Africa—the Bastards. The tale covers four generations, starting with the poor English missionary who settles in a miserable Hottentot village and in his loneliness, weakness and fanaticism marries a native girl. He dies in squalor and wretchedness but he has started a new generation marked with a color-streak. The fortunes of the daughter, the grand-daughter and the great-grandson of the Rev. Andrew Flood make the tragic story." Book rev. digest

Sons of Mrs Aab. Liveright 1931 340p $2.50

"Gideon Aab, futilely working in the worn-out diamond mines of Sheba, hates his imbecile brother Hercules and rages against the circumstances which have deprived him of an education and freedom.

Through fraud, Gideon insures Hercules's life, in the reasonable expectation of an early death, naming himself as beneficiary. But tragedy uncovers the fraud and Gideon is brought to ultimate ruin. A remarkable picture of life in a South African mining settlement" Bkl.

Three men die, a novel. Harper 1934 278p $2.50

"This story of three murders is a psychological study rather than a mystery. Julia Foster was a rather ordinary little woman, who in order to satisfy her two desires for money and for sex fulfillment, murdered her two husbands and her son. The scene of the story is laid in Johannesburg, South Africa." Book rev. digest

What hath a man? A novel. Harper 1938 316p $2.50

"Character study of Henry Ormandy, a sensitive and introspective Englishman. Inspired by a speech of Cecil Rhodes he went to South Africa, met Rhodes and became a member of the Chartered Company of Rhodesia, serving there in an official capacity for some years. After his son was killed in the World war, life held very little for Henry. His later years were spent in England, where he died in 1930, a bewildered old man trying in vain to grasp the significance of a modern world." Book rev. digest

Feast of lanterns. Stokes 1920 304p o.p. 1941

"Deals with a patrician Chinese girl's struggle between her love for an Englishman whom she meets while she is being educated in England to serve her country, and her loyalty and sense of duty toward China. An interesting and colorful picture of Chinese family life and national ideals." Cleveland

Green goddess. Stokes 1922 330p o.p. 1941

The story of this novel is based upon the melodrama of the same name. "Major Crespian is an English officer stationed in India. When the war comes he longs to see active service at the front, but is obliged to remain where he is. . . His wife, Lucilla, endures his drunkenness and his infidelities in silence, finding consolation in the love of her children and the friendship of Dr. Traherne. . . An airplane accident forces these three to make a landing in the courtyard of the temple of the Green Goddess and places them in the power of the Rajah of Rukh, an Oriental despot. His people demand that these visitors be sacrificed to the Green Goddess. The Rajah offers to spare Lucilla's life on the condition that she shall enter his harem. Major Crespian atones for his past misdeeds by gallantly sacrificing his life to save the other two." N.Y. Times

In a Shantung garden. Stokes 1924 351p o.p. 1941

"A romance of the love of a young American business man for a daughter of China. His father had told him 'Learn China and the Chinese. That is the one essential that I want you to accomplish presently. Take your time about it. Do it thoroughly.' Young Drew chose the most universal way of doing it, and in the old Shantung garden he learned a race through the heart of a woman." N.Y. World

It happened in Peking. Stokes 1926 368p o.p. 1941

"A story of the Boxer uprising involving a young man from Chicago, an English girl and a high born Manchurian maiden. Has plot interest, and gives revealing glimpses of Chinese life, bringing out differences between Chinese and Manchurian." Wis. bul.

Mr & Mrs Sên. Stokes 1923 325p o.p. 1941

"The theme of the story is an international marriage between a wealthy, cultivated, Oxford-bred Chinese and an English girl. There are only small clouds on the happiness of their first years of married life in England, but when he goes to China on a visit to his relatives and his wife insists on going with him the skies change. . . He shields her at every turn and when she begs him to take her back to England he yields, tho against his will, to her entreaties. There the author makes him die, some years later, of homesickness, leaving two children to adjust themselves to the difficulties of their racial inheritance." Peng Wee's harvest. Stokes 1933 346p o.p. 1941

"Peng Wee, aristocratic daughter of old China, is badly snubbed in an American boarding school by a class-mate,

Helen Conway, who looks upon the Chinese girl as her racial inferior. But Peng Wee, tho she withdraws, retains her gentle admiration for the Americans, and when years later in China she is able to do Helen a great service, there are no barriers raised to the reconciliation that follows." Book rev. digest

Rice; a novel. Stokes 1930 333p o.p. 1941

"A story of mother love and sacrifice for an only daughter, and a tracing of that daughter's life thru many years. The background is China, and the characters are mainly Chinese peasants" Book rev. digest

Ruben and Ivy Sên. Stokes 1925 360p o.p. 1941

"Ruben Sên is the son of Ruby Sên, the widow of Sên King-Lo whose own story was told in 'Mr. and Mrs. Sên.' Ruben, English in appearance, is Chinese in mind and heart. Ivy, his sister, has a Chinese face, which she hates, for under the skin she is all English. The two conflicting natures are the ironic results of the blood mixture that came of the marriage of Sên King-Lo and Ruby Gilbert, the English girl. From these conflicts, and the pain and anxiety of the watching mother, Mrs. Miln has constructed a strong novel" Literary rev.

Vintage of Yon Yee. Stokes 1931 360p o.p. 1941

"The story of Lois Allington, the daughter of a high-born Chinese mother, and an aristocratic English father. In accordance with a promise to his dying wife, Edward Allington had brought up his daughter to know the best that both Europe and China had to offer. When the inevitable day came and Lois had to choose between a Chinese lover and an English one, it brought sorrow to Lois herself, and many of those near and dear to her." Book rev digest

Milne, Alan Alexander, 1882-

Mr Pim. Dutton 1922 315p $2 50

A pleasant novelization of the delightful English comedy of manners, Mr Pim passes by. "Old Mr. Pim, in his gentle way, shuffled into the charming English household composed by Mr. Marden, typical conservative land owner, his adorable wife, his young ward and her would-be fiancé. Mr. Pim said a few words and went away leaving Mr. Marden with the devastating knowledge that his wife's first husband instead of lying in his grave in Australia has just landed in England." Publisher's note

* Red house mystery; with an introduction by the author. Dutton 1922 211p $1

"A murder mystery, unravelled in clever dialogue, and based upon mistaken identity and the diabolical machinations of the victim's private secretary. The scene is an old English manor house." Cleveland

Detective: Antony Gillingham

Two people; a novel. Dutton 1931 313p $2 50

"When Reginald Wellard wrote a best seller he was transformed from a country gentleman, whose chief occupations were gardening and loving his beautiful wife, to a person of note. He made tentative excursions into literary and theatrical circles, and became conscious of his lovely Sylvia's lack of intellect, and unhappily aware of her attractiveness to other men. Some readers may find the Milne whimsicality, when spread over three hundred pages of slight plot, somewhat tiresome; for others the book will be none to long" Bkl.

"The love story of Angus and Solange runs like a delicate, clear thread throughout this dark tale of the wresting of the Northwest territory from the Indians, the French, and finally from the English. The death of Solange at Drumlin's fort and that of Alice Burgoon earlier in Kentucky provide the incitement for revenge. Confusion of thought and of patriotism are inherent in the times which are set forth in all their vulgar hurly-burly." Bkl.

Oh, Susanna; a romance of the old American merchant marine Putnam 1922 401p o.p. 1941

"The hero, Matthew Parsons, was born to the sea, his two grandfathers being ship owners and builders and his father a master mariner. Matthew's ambition from boyhood was to be 'dandy mate of a Black Ball packet' He early attained his ambition and he fell in love with a golden haired girl in the steerage, whom he lost in the confusion of landing. He sailed to Japan and when the California gold fever came, he built his clipper ship Golden Fleece to carry the gold seekers. But Matthew himself sought another kind of gold, and his quest was rewarded." Book rev. digest

 A seven-year-old rajah is brought up in Connecticut, as Amos Judd, in ignorance of his origin "The most dramatic incidents of his life hinge upon his wonderful faculty of foreseeing events. . . "A story of the years before, during, and after the Civil war, in [Georgia]. Its heroine, Scarlett O'Hara, is anything but the usual Southern belle, and once freed from the shackles of ladyhood in which she has been bred, she emerges as a forceful and ruthless woman. Matching her is Rhett Butler, the blockade runner, as engaging a scoundrel as has appeared in fiction for many a day. There are dozens of other characters representing the old and the new forces in the South. A long novel but one in which interest never falters." Wis. bul.

Corduroy. Appleton 1923 294p o.p. 1941

"There is romance when Dean Wolcott of the Boston Wolcotts comes West to find the sister of his buddy, whose mortal remains he left on Flanders fields, and to give her his last messages. Virginia Valdes McVeigh, better known as 'Ginger' becomes owner of an immense cattle ranch, as a heritage of the war. Dean and Virginia find that true love never runs smooth and that Boston and western standards are different." Springfield Republican

Old San Francisco; decorations by E. C. Caswell. Appleton-Century 1933 4v illus $5

"Four novelettes dealing with San Francisco from the 1840s to the 1870s. 'Blue for True Love', about the city in the '40s, describes the beginnings of the Yankee invasion of the Spanish city. 'Fire', a story of the '60s, tells of the Vigilante movement, and of the war against fire; 'Curtain', the third story, deals with the Civil war period; and 'Tell Your Fortune', a story of the '70s, describes the days when tremendous fortunes were made and lost. The author is herself a Californian." Book rev. digest

Water. Appleton-Century 1931 325p o.p. 1941

"The San Joaquin valley, where irrigation ditches and rain are man's most prized possessions, is the scene of this novel. From an adored football and polo star, Darrow Brant becomes manager of his uncle's dairy ranch where he subsequently falls in love with the 'dairy maid.' The characters are well portrayed and the California atmosphere permeates his book." Wis. bul.

y Red city; a novel of the second administration of President Washington. . . Appleton-Century 1908 421p illus $2. Philadelphia, 1792-95. Sequel to "Hugh Wynne," in which a French noble loves a Quaker maiden. Deals with the time of Washington's second administration, when the Federalists led by Hamilton, were opposed by the Republicans led by Jefferson. The period was marked by wild scenes in Philadelphia (the Jacobin Clubs, etc.), and the story reflects these disturbances. Jefferson, Alexander Hamilton, Edmund Randolph, and (at the end) George Washington, all appear." Nield

Westways; a village chronicle. Century 1913 510p o.p. 1941

The time is that preceding the Civil war and the tragedy of this story is that of a house divided against itself by the approach of the war. "Westways" is in Pennsylvania

[The author] gives an impressive picture of Gaul during the seven years of Caesar's campaigns. At the same time she makes the emotions of her characters actual and our own" New statesman

Corn king and the Spring queen; with four pictures by Z. Stryjenska; being decorations of the Polish national pavilion in the Paris exhibition of 1926. Harcourt 1930? 721p illus o.p. 1941

"In this long historical novel of the third century B.C., Greeks, barbarians, Spartans, and Egyptians mingle in a splendid pageant. Strange pagan rites, religious observances, and barbaric cruelties are presented in frank and intimate detail. The characters are living and human and the story, in spite of its many ramifications, is skillfully centered about Tarrik, the Corn king, and Erif Der, the Spring queen. Excellent work but of limited appeal." Bkl.

We have been warned; a novel. Vanguard 1936 553p $2.75

"The period of the story is 1931-1933, and the scene shifts about from a country house in Scotland to an industrial town, to London, Oxford and Russia. The subject is, broadly speaking, the adventures along the borderlands of socialism and communism. . . of Dione Galton, a generous-natured, indefatigable and infinitely humorous upper middle-class Scotchwoman." Contents: Memory of youth; Sleepless nights; The earth is ours

"Memory of youth" published separately 1938 is still available from Simon & Schuster, at $2.50

"The theme is the conflict between city life and the ancient, traditional life of the peasant. When the hero's job as editor of a cheap magazine becomes unendurable, he returns to the farm he left as a boy. But going back presents unexpected complications, which the author indicates very movingly and solves with the aid of the Munich pact." New Yorker

Paul street boys, tr by Louis Rittenberg Macy-Masius 1927 292p o p. 1941

"A story of two rival school boy gangs in Budapest. The Paul Street boys defend their beloved 'grund,' a lumber-yard fortress, from the Pasztor boys. Private Nemecsek, the youngest of the Paul Street boys and the only private, is the hero of the deciding battle, giving his life for his 'country.' It is a book about boys for adults, written out of a deep affection for boys and with a remarkable penetration into the boy mind." Book rev. digest

"Riza Nagy, a pretty cashier in a Budapest pastry shop robs her employer of three hundred florins. A young lawyer, Nicholas Chathy, undertakes her defense. Before Riza's trial comes off she confesses to Nicholas that she loves him and that she stole the money in order that she might buy finery in which to make herself lovely in his eyes. The story reaches its climax in the trial scene when Nicholas under the glow and pleading of Riza's eyes realizes that he loves her and makes a moving speech for the defense, which, however, does not secure her acquittal."  "A quiet book, simply written, giving a strong, clear picture of the development of a small denominational college and its smug, self-righteous community over a century of time. The prim, restrained prose is an excellent medium to portray the narrow, puritanical, warped characters of four generations of the founder's family. One feels that the author must have concentrated the tragedies of the whole town in one family, but the final effect is an authentic and sincere presentation of American life in a fanatically religious and moral community. Will appeal to those who like social and psychological analyses of an age and a people." Bkl.

"Romance pitched to the stirring exploits of Andrew Jackson and David Crockett in the War of 1812 is the aim of this Tennessee story, half fiction, half historical, with a generous interlarding of renegade trappers, Creek Indians, and plotting Spaniards more than sufficient to delight the imagination of a homebred boy in his 'teens.'" Portrait in a mirror. Knopf 284p $2.50

First published 1929 as "First love"

"Nigel Frew, an artist, tells this story in retrospect. As a youth of eighteen he meets and falls in love with Clare, feeling for her only the tenderest spiritual affection. This 'first love' remains with him as a vision of his youth throughout life, and makes it impossible for him to accept the realities of physical love. The novel is delicately and precisely written, but is somewhat limited in appeal." Bkl.

* Sparkenbroke. Macmillan 1936 551p $2.75

"The same series, philosophical vein that characterized 'The fountain' . . . appears again in this story of Mary and of the two men who loved her and whom she loved. One was her husband, a hard-working devoted country doctor, the other was Lord Sparkenbroke, brilliant, erratic writer, wholly self-centered and unscrupulous in the use of his power over women. For some readers the lengthy analyses of emotions may be tedious, but many others will appreciate the intellectual challenge of the reflections on the relation of love and art, and the contrast of Sparkenbroke, gifted but unmoral, with the integrity of the other characters." "Forever free" first published 1927 is the story of two years of Lincoln's life beginning with his inauguration March 4, 1861, and closing with the signing of the Emancipation edict on New Year's night, 1863. Also available from Grosset at $1

"With malice toward none" first published 1928 deals with the last two years of the Civil war and is concerned chiefly with the conflict between Lincoln and Charles Sumner over reconstruction policies. Also available from Grosset at $1

"The last full measure" first published 1930 deals with the final days of the war but is chiefly concerned with Lincoln's plans for reconstruction and the development of the plot which ended in his assassination. Also available from Grosset at $1

Judith of the godless valley. Morrow 1922 354 $2

"Story of two young people who grew up in an unfortunate environment and of the influences that unite to redeem them. The scene is a western valley in which the third generation of New England settlers has allowed itself to sink to a low moral level." Wis. bul.

In Morrow, Mrs H. M. W. Great captain v3

y Let the king beware! Morrow 1936 376p $2.50

"Against the background of the court of George III, on the eve of the American Revolution, the author has spun a tale of romance and political intrigue, of which Tristram Amory, a Massachusetts Tory, is the hero. Tarred and feathered because of his political views in his own country, Amory goes to England and thru his relative, Lord North, gains admission to the court. There he becomes the trusted friend of the king, and, not without difficulties, marries a young member of the queen's household. The book has an entirely new interpretation of the personality of George III. Benjamin Franklin figures prominently also." Book rev. digest

* On to Oregon! the story of a pioneer boy. Morrow 1926 247p $1.75

The hero, John Sager, is a thirteen year old boy who with his parents and younger brothers and sisters left Missouri for Oregon in early pioneer days. At first, John was a wistful, disobedient, and selfish little boy. But with the death of his father and then of his mother the lad wakes up, and taking charge of his six little dependents actually succeeds in making the frightful journey across the Rockies

* Splendor of God. Morrow 1929 382p $2.50

Also obtainable from Grosset at $1
"A fictionized narrative of the spiritual adventure of Adoniram Judson and his beautiful wife, Ann, the first Baptist missionaries to Burma. Following the facts of hardship and persecution, Mrs Morrow has supplied character interest and inspiration. She has shown skill in painting the exotic background and in contrasting the philosophy of Buddhist and Christian." Cleveland

Still Jim. Morrow 1915 369p $2

Also obtainable from Grosset at $1
"The struggles and growth of a young engineer in the reclamation service, whose inflexible New England standards help him to do honest and successful work, but hinder him woefully in his human relations." Cleveland Appeared serially in "Everybody's magazine"

y We must march; a novel of the winning of Oregon. Grosset 427p 50c

First published 1925 by Stokes
"A historical romance of the courageous missionary-pioneers whose wagon train was the first to cross the Rockies. The story centers about Narcissa, the young bride of Marcus Whitman." Pittsburgh

In Morrow, Mrs H. M. W. Great captain v2

y Yonder sails the Mayflower Morrow 1934 368p $2.50

"All of the action of the story takes place in the short interval while the Mayflower was waiting to get underway. Perhaps for this reason, there is a feeling that the story never quite starts; nevertheless it has value historically for its setting forth of a stage in the adventure which has usually been overlooked, and for its introduction of the Mayflower group, not as staid Pilgrims, but as a vigorous group of young and ardent men and women, the majority in their 30's or younger." - At the sign of the Lame dog. Houghton 1933 311p o.p. 1941

"Changes in English rural life from the opening of the century to today are pictured in this story which centers around an old coaching inn in Suffolk, its proprietor and his family. Earl Barningham, horse-dealer and publican and a shrewd, obstinate man, fought to keep the old order, but found himself helpless against an irresistible force, and at the close of the story The Lame Dog has become a combination garage and tearoom. A quiet, unexciting novel, its charm lies in reality of atmosphere and people. The country dialect is a delight." Wis bul

"Geoffrey Skene, the hero of 'The Spanish farm' trilogy, seeks to merge himself in his post-war architectural work, hoping to avoid emotion and to attain peace of mind and heart. But, most disturbingly, he falls in love with the unhappily married daughter of a war profiteer. The inevitable course of their love and the analysis of character is of greater interest than the adjustments of post-war living." Cleveland

"The setting of this chronicle of French life during the war [of 1914-1918] is a substantial farmstead in French Flanders within sound of the guns, which was used continuously for the billeting of British troops. The central character is Madeleine Vanderlynden, a masterful young French girl and daughter of the owner of the farm, whom a succession of army officers and men held in wholesome respect and paid liberally for her service and supplies. The book is an evidently truthful picture of life in this part of the war zone and a character study of this resolute girl who is made to typify the indomitable spirit of the French borderland." After the children have become scattered and lost in southern Europe the author leaves them, as history does, to an unknown fate, while she follows on the adventures of two; Stephen the shepherd boy whose vision was responsible for the movement, and Chara, the daughter of a German baron on the Rhine. The theme makes it good supplementary reading for high school history students." Wis. bul.

- Purple pirate. Appleton-Century 1935 367p $2.50

"A sequel to 'Tros of Samothrace' in which the hero finds himself involved in the struggle for world dominion following the death of Caesar. The scene is laid in Egypt where Tros fights pirates, thwarts plots and matches wits against the wiles of Cleopatra. A good tale of adventure." Wis. bul.

- Queen Cleopatra; a novel. Bobbs 1929 426p o.p. 1941

"In this dramatic tale, the fruit of seven years' work, Mr. Mundy shows us Cleopatra, in her early twenties, a woman of subtlety, force and charm who, acting on the political creed, 'I am Egypt,' threw all the weight of her tact and personality into the scale of independence and supremacy for her kingdom. The story is set in the period when Cleopatra is warring against her young brother, Ptolemy, and opens with the coming of Caesar to settle the dispute. The romance is a welcome supplement to Arthur Weigall's fascinating biography of the queen." Cleveland

- Tros of Samothrace Appleton-Century 1934 949p $3

"Tros of this historical novel is a Greek navigator who hates Roman imperialism and tries to save Britain from Caesar. The story is a series of intrigues in which he is involved. Long, with material enough for half a dozen books, but valuable for its atmosphere and a good supplement to Roman history." Wis. bul.

Unbearable Bassington, by Saki (pseud.); with an introduction by Maurice Baring. Viking 244p o.p. 1941

First published 1913

"The character study of Comus Bassington, a witty, handsome, lovable yet exasperating youth, with just that lack in character which predicated failure. His mother is a selfishly ambitious woman to whom Comus's failures are torture. Mother and son are drawn to the life. Their friends and enemies, members of the aristocratic set in which they move, are summed up in a paragraph, set off in a phrase, in 'Saki's' inimitable style. The story moves toward tragedy, when the spiritual breach between mother and son becomes irremediable." Book rev. digest

C. E. Craddock (pseud.). Houghton 1884
423p o.p. 1941
First published in "Lippincott's" under title: "Beyond the seas." Later practically rewritten and published under title given above
The characters are: "an old Southern general and his daughter, victims of the war, a young officer her lover, lawyers, financiers, and the society of a country town in Tennessee. The story turns on the growth and ultimate ripening of love between the officer and Marcia, and a deep-laid plot to rob another young lady of her fortune. What gives the book a peculiar imaginative colouring is the proximity of the old battlefield, haunting the lives of men and unconsciously swaying their souls." Baker's Best

"Brighton, the English seaside resort, in its hey-day early in the nineteenth century, was the home of Regency Davenport—reckless, self-willed, and profligate (for a time the mistress of a prince). The town's changing fortunes were a background for several generations of Regency's descendants, women who inherited spirit and whose lives also were tragic because they did not conform. Long, crowded with detail." Bkl.

Tale of three cities; a novel in baroque. Knopf 1940 725p $3

"Historical romance in the grand style, with a hero who begins his career by running away from a monastery in Rome in the days of Mazzini, has a picaresque existence as a sculptor in London, and later, at the court of Napoleon III, becomes a favorite of the empress. In the background there is a woman who loves the hero, but also loves Italy, her religion, a villainous brother, and political intrigue. For readers who like swash-buckling fiction with lavish detail and many characters; others will find it tedious." Bkl.

Myers, Elaine

Loaves and fishes Henkle 1934 345p
o.p. 1941

"A simple story of one family in a Maine fishing village and of the mother's struggle to keep a growing family together after the father was lost at sea. Its wholesome tone and its sincerity will please readers who do not object to occasional passages of over-sentimental pathos." Bkl.

Myers, Henry

Our lives have just begun Stokes 1939
212p o.p. 1941

"With touches of irony and yet with moving simplicity, the author has told the story of the Children's Crusade. Adam Brisson, the troubadour, who unwittingly set the movement in motion and who accompanies the children to atone as far as he can for the wrong he has done, is a whimsical, cynical, lovable character who helps to make the whole strange episode comprehensible to the modern reader. The background of the middle ages, as the author sketches it in, becomes very real also." Wis. bul.

Pool of Vishnu. Harcourt 1940 412p
$2.75

"Readers of 'The root and the flower' will be interested in this sequel which continues the story of sixteenth-century India during the reign of Akbar the Great. It can be read alone, however. On the surface it is a novel of royal intrigue, conflict, plot and counterplot, but primarily it is, as in its predecessor, philosophical in its quest for an answer to the mystery of life. Written in unaffected prose which is not dated; its leisurely interest in meditation, which sometimes becomes protracted, limits its appeal." Bkl.

Rajah Amar

In Myers, L. H. Root and the flower

* Root and the flower. Harcourt 1935 583p
o.p. 1941

"Although laid in India in the sixteenth century, this novel of court circles is philosophical rather than historical. It follows the manifestations of the rivalry between the two sons of the emperor Akbar, with the accompanying intrigue and debauchery, but its underlying theme is the search for a meaning in life, revealed in the spiritual seeking of representatives of different religions. The book is a trilogy containing two novels, 'The near and the far' and 'Prince Jali,' which have been published before, and one new one, 'Rajah Amar.'" Bkl.

"This novel, told in the first person by one Giovannino Penta, relates the history of the gradual decline of an Italian bourgeois family during a period of years from about 1880 to 1880. The principal character is Giovannino himself, but we see also his grandfather, his father and his mother, his brothers and sisters, watch their quarrels and outbreaks, follow the course of various love affairs, and finally witness Giovannino's descent into the gutter, driven nearly mad when his long-suffering mistress leaves him." Book rev.

Nathan, Robert, 1894-

Robert Nathan's "The Barly fields" (Knopf 1938 523p $3) is a collection of the five following novels: Fiddler in Barly; Woodcutter's house; Bishop's wife; The orchid; There is another heaven

Autumn. McBride 1921 198p o.p. 1941

Story of an old New England school master. "All but a perfect native pastoral." Carl Van Doren

The Barly fields. See note under Nathan

Bishop's wife. Bobbs 1928 208p o.p. 1941

"A bishop desirous of raising funds for his new skyscraper cathedral, his young, lovely and emotionally-starved wife, and Michael the comely archangel sent in answer to the bishop's prayer for an efficient and tactful archdeacon, are the characters in this delicately satirical triangle tale. An indictment of a modern clergyman and of a business man's church, less spectacular than Elmer Gantry and much nearer the truth." New republic

* Enchanted voyage. Knopf 1936 187p $2

y "In his homemade sailboat on wheels, ineffectual little Hector Pecket, a Bronx carpenter, escaped for a time from the city-world and his nagging wife. With his crew—an unemployed waitress and an impecunious dentist—he sailed the highway, dreamed of long voyages, and met adventure bravely. Fantastic and gently ironical." Bkl.

Fiddler in Barly. McBride 1926 194p o.p. 1941

"A simple story woven around the members of a small town and a stranger, an unusual fiddler, accompanied by his dancing dog, Musket. . . The animals in the story are personified and interesting conversations ensue between Musket and the barnyard population. . . A fanciful tale, quite well written, which would probably appeal to a very limited number." Cleveland staff notes

Jonah; or, The withering vine; with a new foreword by the author; wood engravings by Boris Artzybasheff. Knopf 212p illus $2

First published 1925

"The ancient story [of the prophet Jonah] is turned into an amusing, gentle satire, told in jauntily modern language." Lenrow

y Journey of Tapiola; with decorations by Georg Salter. Knopf 1938 121p illus $1.75 (W)

The adventures of a Yorkshire terrier and his friend, a canary who wanted to become a baritone. Published in an abridged version in the "Atlantic monthly"

* One more spring. Knopf 1933 212p $2

"In this charming, gentle, and ironic story Mr. Nathan offers subtle and wise reflections on the depression [of 1929]. A dealer in antiques, who had lost everything except a huge bed carved with cupids, and an impecunious, but ambitious, violinist spend the winter in a tool shed in Central Park. Reluctantly they take in a homeless prostitute who proves to be of considerably better caliber than the ruined banker whom they add later. The four viewed life from quite different angles, but they all wished to live to see 'one more spring.' Written in beautiful and simple prose with tenderness and quiet humor." Bkl.

The orchid. Bobbs 1931 198p o.p. 1941

"When a beautiful actress begins to fear a friendless old age, she is in danger of accepting a married man's proposal of elopement. So it is not strange to find involved in her problem, her hairdresser, Mrs Connor, and Professor Fembauer, wise and sympathetic man as well as music teacher, and his friend, Gambino who conducts a merry-go-round and sings a loud 'high B flat lowered just a little to fit the voice.' Nathan's delicate and pervasive mockery make a perfect thing of this little tale." N.Y. libraries

* Portrait of Jennie. Knopf 1939 212p

y $2 (W)

"The story of a gifted artist who could not find himself and of a strange and lovely girl he met one wet winter twilight on the mall in Central Park." Hunting

Puppet master. McBride 1923 221p o.p. 1941

"Tho this story of a puppet maker and his dolls is almost pure fantasy, yet the author's meaning speaks plainly thru his allegory. Papa Jonas's little creatures of wood and cloth and paper consort on equal terms with his human friends, Mary Holly and her daughter Amu May, and Christopher Lane, his poet assistant. . . Thru his dolls as mouthpieces, with the help of wise Papa Jonas and his friends, the author unfolds his philosophy of life and love and marriage, a philosophy as mellow and wise as it is fanciful in its presentation." Book rev. digest

* Road of ages. Knopf 1935 232p $2

"Mr Nathan has imagined a final exile of all Jews from all countries and this is the story of their slow march eastward across Europe toward Asia to the Gobi desert, offered by the Mongols as a haven. With gentle but convincing irony the heterogeneous mass of humanity is presented—all nationalities, many creeds, rich, poor, communists, musicians, scientists, bankers, traders, and many others. Through a few characters of very different backgrounds the story is told: love, death, birth, and strife go on as ever; hardships are endured; seasons change. A distinguished work which, because more serious in conception than 'One more spring' will have a somewhat more limited appeal." Bkl.

There is another heaven. Bobbs 1929 190p o.p. 1941

"Three men, one a converted Jew, arrive with eager expectations in a heaven where the inhabitants see and hear and know only what they desired or wished on earth; here the few powers they developed in life, and only those, find eternal employment. In the story of the disappointments which follow, are provocative satire, probing wit and genuine human understanding expressed in finely wrought and balanced prose." N.Y. libraries

* They went on together. Knopf 1941
y 191p $2 (W)

The story of a simple, ordinary family who, with the rest of their townfolk, are being forced to evacuate their homes because of war

* Winter in April. Knopf 1938 228p $2
y (W)

"A scholarly grandfather ponders over the mysterious ways of his fifteen-year-old orphaned granddaughter who lives with him. On one day she is a child; on another she is desperately in love with his secretary, a German exile. The engrossing affair of the first dance frock runs throughout the charmingly told, tender tale." Bkl.

Woodcutter's house. Bobbs 1927 206p
op 1941

"A slight story in the form of a fable told in lyric prose. There are humans none of which either the author or the reader would have a whit different, but Mr Nathan's bestiary is what makes the book so engaging. Who else could create 'the largest apple-owning wasp in Wayne County,' and beetles, dogs and field mice who indulge in stimulating conversation and have, each one, his own pocket philosophy?" "The director of research with the Museum of the American Indian Heye foundation, after years spent in study of the Hopi Indian customs, has written a novel based upon this knowledge. By weaving together myth and legend and fact he has reconstructed the story of the terrible Arizona drought of eighty years ago. Illustrated with photographs of modern Hopi Indians. Included is a glossary of Hopi words." Book rev. digest

Neumann, Alfred, 1895-

Another Caesar; tr. from the German by Eden and Cedar Paul. Knopf 1935 589p $3

Published in England under title: New Caesar

"With the Napoleonic era and the Second Empire as a background, Herr Neumann in this historical novel has for hero a tragic-comic figure, Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. Son of Hortense Beauharnais (but of doubtful legitimacy) Louis is brought up in the Napoleonic cult. Weak in character and of a conflicting personality, he is influenced by a number of cross political currents and diverse interests. Yet his fanatical belief in his own destiny carries him thru adventures of which scandal, pursuit and imprisonment are a part, on to the achievement of a coup d'état and the presidency of the Second Republic." Book rev. digest Followed by "Gaudy empire"

The devil; tr. from the German by Huntley Paterson. Knopf 1928 368p o.p. 1941

"The story of Oliver Necker, the barber of Ghent and of Louis XI of France; of their two lives indissolubly merged through love and hate, intrigue and war, and, above all, a fundamental identity of mind and temperament. Three tremendous motifs occupy their lives and make up the book: intrigue, love and death." N.Y. Times

Gaudy empire; a novel; tr. from the German by Eden and Cedar Paul. Knopf 1937 552p $2.75

"Concludes the novelized life of Louis Napoleon, begun so brilliantly in 'Another Caesar'. . . The story carries Napoleon the Little from the 'coup d'état' to his death in 1873, through that marvelous, vulgar, gay, and cynical period we now know as the Second Empire. . . The second half makes rather heavy going, but a few difficult or even bored moments shouldn't put you off. Neumann. . . is really a master at this sort of book." New Yorker

The hero; the tale of a political murder; tr. from the German by Huntley Paterson. Knopf 1931 324p o.p. 1941

"The story of a political murder in Germany. . . The murdered man was a Prime Minister whom his enemies regarded as 'revolutionary'; the assassin was a leader of the 'National League,' a military organization of the counter-revolutionary movement. The events are crowded into the space of a few days before and after the murder, and the chief interest is in the state of mind and general psychology of the perversely meditative murderer."  "One of those English novels that develop slowly thru the period of childhood to maturity. Hugh Randall is the fourth of a line of ship builders, destined to carry on the name and the business. Deflected from it for a time by a counter attraction for painting, he returns in the end to take up his responsibilities, influenced chiefly by devotion to his grandmother." Wis. bul.

Out of that dream Doubleday 1935 307p o.p. 1941

"The story of a ten-day trip from Cannes to New York, which recounts the experiences of a small group of the passengers on the Victor Emmanuel. The central character is Redley Barden, a beautiful young girl who is going to New York to be married. The other characters are important only as their lives and sensations touch the life of Redley. There is an ardent young Italian who falls in love with Redley; a precocious child traveling alone; the vice president of a concern referred to vaguely as the industries; and the millionaire head of that concern. Around these characters the story of the voyage revolves." Book rev. digest

"Reared on an isolated Danish dairy farm, Pelle, the son of a poor unskilled Swedish laborer, is apprenticed to a shoemaker in a small provincial town. There he learns the value of love and a hatred of vice and tyranny. His social consciousness wakes when he goes to Copenhagen and lives in a squalid tenement. On his release from the prison where he is thrown for leading a strike, his vision is broadened and he achieves greatness by laying the foundation for a co-operative workmen's village. "Peru at the time of the Spanish conquest is the setting for this idyllic story of Salle, young Inca Virgin of the Sun, and Tito who loved her from childhood. The coming of the Spaniards, changing the old order, seemed an opportunity for happiness—but the Sun God could not be offended. The author has a faculty for re-creating a period through the lives of people and the characters are well drawn." Bkl

"The author has gone into the records of a celebrated court fight of 1839-40, arising from the case of a mutinous crew of Cuban slaves captured off Long Island, and made of it a novel. Justice of the peace; with introductions by Hugh Walpole and Christopher Morley. Liveright 1923 453p $2.50

"A story of three people, father, mother and son. The father is a generous-hearted manufacturer of 'soft goods,' limited by his rearing and environment. He and his son are often at cross-purposes, especially as to the younger Moir's desire to be an artist instead of going into the paternal business. But this is due to Moir senior's very vague notion of art and artists. After a time he comes round handsomely, develops pride in his son's career, and some understanding of it." Independent

 "An unusually convincing character study of a Scotch gentlewoman who faces poverty and squalor with simple dignity, as she struggles to make a home for her small son by keeping a lodging house in Glasgow, and finally faces death with the same fortitude. Paisley shawl. Dodd 1931 252p o.p. 1941

"The hero is a young novelist suffering the miseries of the pre-birth period of the theme and plot of his next novel. A brilliant and beautiful woman poet and critic comes to interview him for a literary portrait. His sympathetic young wife welcomes the ensuing visit and friendship as a possible source of inspiration for the new novel, and the state is set for our tragedy-comedy. . . . This is one of those near-tragedies which shows what might have been had not the wife been so wise in her innocence, the husband so truly in love with his wife, the other woman so mental in her sexuality that she hesitated—and lost."  y Little 1936 903p illus $3

A one-volume edition of the three novels: "Mutiny on the Bounty," published 1932, "Men against the sea," published 1934 and "Pitcairn's island," published 1934. All three are available separately from Little at $2 each

Founded on one of the most extraordinary episodes in the annals of the British Navy, the authors have created an imaginative work of fiction

"The 'Bounty's' voyage from England after breadfruit, the mutiny, and the punishment of the captured seamen are the subject of 'Mutiny on the Bounty.' 'Men against the sea' is the story of Captain Bligh and the sailors set adrift by the mutineers. The final volume is the history of those mutineers who, with eighteen Polynesian men and women, reached Pitcairn's island and there destroyed the 'Bounty' . . . A blood-curdling story, not for the squeamish reader. Serialized in the Saturday Evening Post." Bkl.

Norris, Charles Gilman, 1881-

Brass; a novel of marriage. Dutton 1921 452p illus o.p. 1941

"This 'novel of marriage' is entirely of marriage and of the conditions which make or destroy its happiness. It shows us one couple after another brought together by love or passion or material reasons and only one of the five marriages of principal characters is lasting and happy. . . . No realistic detail is spared which contributes to the causes of unhappiness or repulsion, and marriage is left with little dignity or glamor. Yet the author's intent is clear and evidently sincere,—to show the obligations of marriage, the tragedy of divorce, the need of mutual forbearance in man and wife especially in the earlier period of adjustment and the rewards, in later life, of sticking together." Book rev. digest

Bread. Dutton 1923 511p o.p. 1941

"The thesis of the novel is that the business woman who has tasted the joys of independence is unfitted for wifehood and motherhood." Book rev. digest

Hands. Farrar 1935 546p o.p. 1941

"Illustrating his theme that Americans must return to pioneer ways, earning their living with their hands, Mr. Norris tells the story of three generations; Michael Baker, carpenter; his son Martin, a wealthy contractor; and his grandson Miles, an indifferent student of architecture. The return of shirt-sleeves is brought about by the depression. Miles earns his living and likes it." Book rev. digest.

Seed; a novel of birth control. Triangle bks 436p 39c

First published 1930 by Doubleday
"For several generations the Carters had prospered on their California ranches. Their women bore many children—some of them too many. The larger portion of the novel follows the story of young Bart and his wife Peggy who come to New York, where Bart hopes to win fame as a writer. . . . The latter chapters of the novel contain arguments for and against birth control." Book rev. digest

Norris, Frank, 1870-1902

McTeague; a story of San Francisco. Doubleday 1899 442p o.p. 1941

"Unmitigatedly realistic picture of Californian life. It gives the stupidity, the animalism, and the grinding poverty of the labouring classes. McTeague is as strong and almost as much a brute as if he were a cart-horse; the other characters are on a par. It is a story of steady degeneracy through poverty, loveless wedlock, and, in two cases, the insensate lust for money." Baker's Best

* The octopus; a story of California. Doubleday 1901 361p o.p. 1941

An epic story of the war between California wheat growers and the railroads
"One cannot read it without a thrill at the breadth of purpose, the earnestness, the astonishing verbal power of its author. The characters are rather dwarfed by the main conception. The pit has a stronger appeal as a human story." F. T. Cooper

Vandover and the brute. Doubleday 354p o.p. 1941

"This is Frank Norris's first story, written in 1894 and 1895. It was put aside for a revision that was never made, and the manuscript which was lost at the time of the San Francisco earthquake [was] recovered. It is a powerful and relentless story of the fight between the god and the beast in man's nature. Vandover is a rich, motherless San Francisco youth who grows up without moral guidance and easily drifts into the loose way of living common to the young men he knows. He has the soul of an artist and dreams of great things he is to accomplish, but his dreams come to naught, for gradually the brute, never held sufficiently in check, takes possession of the whole man, and Vandover is left at the end, a pitiable wreck." The Callahans and The Murphys. Doubleday 1924 381p illus o.p. 1941

"The book is divided into two long novelettes, the first entitled 'The Callahans,' the second 'The Murphys.' In 'The Callahans' the central figure is Agnes Callahan, the widowed mother of Jim, Annie, Mary and Josie. Jim was the main support of the family, Annie was a school teacher, Mary was a telephone operator and Josie was still in high school. Mrs Callahan kept the house efficiently, made her children happy, and was always ready to help her neighbors. In 'The Murphys,' the action centers around the beautiful young Ellen Murphy. Both novelettes give poignant glimpses of the life of the middle-class Irish families, in their joys and their sorrows, successes and failures." Book rev. digest

Certain people of importance. Doubleday 1922 486p illus o.p. 1941

"The book is the history of the Crabtree family. From its dim New England origin it follows one of its members, Reuben Crabtree and his family, to the middle west and later to California, where a new generation of Reuben Crabtrees live and flourish, marry, have children and die. Very real characters are described in detail with their human failings and kindnesses, their good and their bad, their ups and their downs in worldly fortunes." Book rev. digest

Mrs K. T. Norris's "Hildegard" (Doubleday 1926 359p o p 1941) continues the story of the daughter of Nellie and Rudy Sessions of "Certain people of importance."

Heartbroken melody Sun dial 307p 69c (W)

First published 1938 by Doubleday. The romance of a business girl who fell in love with the lawyer for whom she worked and how her life was altered by an accident which crippled her temporarily.

Hildegard. See note under Norris. Certain people of importance

Little ships; a novel. Doubleday 1925 427p o.p. 1941

"The story of Mollie and Peter Cunningham, their children and their kin is a true family chronicle. The Cunninghams are Irish-American Roman Catholics living in San Francisco. Peter is a prosperous wholesale grocer. Mollie a doting mother. They have five living children and 'two angels.' These children are the little ships that in their love they would guide into safe harbor. The story follows the course of these little ships and the storms that beset them." Book rev. digest

Lost sunrise. Sun dial 339p 69c (W)

First published 1939 by Doubleday. The story of two sisters, their husbands, their loves, their homes and children. The scene moves from California to Washington political circles and back to the redwood country.

Mother; a story. Doubleday 1911 172p $1

Also available from Grosset at 85c. "Unassuming but impressive story which deplets in sharp contrast a modern society leader with her activities and a true mother who is the centre and life of a large family brought up with strict economy." Pittsburgh

Secret of the Marshbanks Doubleday 1940 304p $2

Also obtainable from Sun dial at 69c. "Cherry, a shy convent-bred girl, introduced into the luxurious home of Judge Marshbanks, finds herself involved in the mystery of the house, and even in a murder. Eventually both mysteries are cleared up, to the advantage of Cherry." Book rev. digest

"The world war [of 1914-1918] is the keynote here, and Brailsford Junction (Wisconsin), a small farming community, is . . . the setting. The Liberty Bond crusades, the propaganda, and the food conservation, are all reproduced in sharp, vigorous writing. Early-Ann struggles to care for her young son, make her story pay, forget her longing for Peter, her soldier husband, and her attraction to Christopher. The signing of the Armistice and Peter's return, close the story." Hunting

Plowing on Sunday Macmillan 1934 265p $2.50

"Story of one year in the life of a farmer in southern Wisconsin, twenty years ago. The chief character is Stud Brailsford, a giant of great strength, who good-naturedly bullies his gentle wife, pampers his cattle, wistfully wishes he had more than one son, makes uneasy love to the pretty hired girl, and is happy and content in the hope of grandchildren at the end of the story."  "Sometime in the future, when the nations are again at war, one of the leaders threatens his enemies with total destruction by a secret force. Unknown to him and to the others, each of the great warring powers also knows the same secret weapon. And they all put it into effect at once. All mankind is wiped out with a few exceptions, chiefly Mark Adams, an English doctor, and Evelyn Hamilton, an American girl. The story recounts their finding each other, their realization that one other is also alive, then finally their discovery of the saving remnant." Book rev. digest

"The scene is the Mississippi Delta country, about ninety miles down the river from New Orleans. The inhabitants of the locality are Cajuns, descendants of the French Canadians, and the Slavs, Negroes, Italians and Filipinos who mix with them. Sister Kalavich is the dominating figure of the book, a beautiful woman, a little apart from her lusty compatriots, but lacking not one whit of their vitality. The story traces the development of her character from the time when she is preparing for her first Communion, thru her several none-too-savory love affairs, to her marriage." Book rev. digest

"Corney Crone, a boulder, native of Cork, as an old man looks back over his life and recalls the scenes of his childhood and youth. He recalls the days spent with his grandfather, an ardent Fenian, his contacts with his dreary father, whose main interest in life was adding up figures, and his various other relatives and friends, nearly all of them natives of Cork. Then he tells the story of his love for Elsie, and its tragic outcome, which left him a being apart—a bird alone." Book rev. digest

* Nest of simple folk. Viking 1934 398p $2.50

"A novel of sustained power and real vitality which tells the story of three generations of Irish people living, between 1854 and 1916, in southwestern Ireland. Their simple, poverty-stricken existence was punctuated with violence of revolutions and family dissension. The central figure, who is the link connecting the dozens of characters, is Leo Foxe-Donnel, who spent a large part of his life in prison for Fenian activities, and wasted the other part in various ways. In spite of the sordidness of many scenes, the book as a whole is lifted above its frequent somber tone by touches of idealism and excellent descriptive passages." Bkl.

Fear, exaltation, gloomy terror and fanatic emotionalism prey upon the little man's mind as he plans the assassination with his accomplices, Kitty, Fetch and Tumulty. * The informer Knopf 1925 312p o.p. 1941

"Gypo Nolan, a gigantic brutal type, an ex-policeman who has even been expelled from the 'Revolutionary Organization,' a secret Communistic society, after months of semi-starvation, betrays, on sudden impulse, a comrade to the police . . . Cautious in mind, yet careless, he squanders the 'bloodmoney' in low public-houses and dens of vice, with a growing sense of exaltation caused by sudden wealth, intoxication and danger. In a last harrowing scene, Gallagher, the revolutionary leader, tortures the giant intellectually in cross-examination, and watches the struggles of that inarticulate mind dulled by drink. However sordid the scenes may be, Mr O'Flaherty shows us the pitiable humanity of the unfortunate informer, and sees, awed by his own creation, beneath the brutality and stupidity, the childlike soul of the man." "Julie Cane is a psychological study of the relations of a father, with a daughter whom no laws of heredity could explain. John Cane, by nature a dreamer and thinker, whom accident had made a grocer and the husband of a sour and loveless woman, could only look at this daughter of his and marvel. He saw a chance to realize in her some of his own dreams and to apply to the teaching of Julie the philosophy which he had worked out from his wide if eccentric reading. And Julie proved an apt pupil." Book rev. digest

 Older, Mrs Cora Miranda (Baggerly) Savages and saints. Dutton 1936 373p $2.50
 "A story of Spanish California after the American conquest, abounding in vivid scenes and colorful characters. It tells of young Father Pedro Lacey, who, having forgotten his vows because of a woman, was sent as penance to restore the ruined mission of Santa Lucia; how, in the physical labor of rebuilding and in ministering to his scattered flock he found peace and victory over self. A novel of deep emotions, which will be best understood by Catholic readers." Bkl

 I am Jonathan Scrivener, by Claude Houghton (pseud.). Simon & Schuster 1930 382p $1
 "Jonathan Scrivener appoints as his secretary a man he has never seen, leaves England, and has the secretary installed in his flat. Is he Death, or the Devil, or merely the author of the book?" New statesman

 This was Ivor Trent, by Claude Houghton (pseud.). Doubleday 1935 303p o.p. 1941
 "Ivor Trent, novelist, sees in a fog brooding over the Embankment the wise, serene face of a new order of being—a man from the future. Following this mystical experience he retires to his rooms at 77 Potiphar Street to recover from what his doctor and landlady consider a state of delirium. Rendell, a young man who has admired his novels, takes lodgings in the same house. During Trent's 'illness' he interviews, or comes in contact with the men and women who have known Trent intimately. Thru them, and their revealed relations with Trent, the author shows the strange and varied facets of his hero's character and life. The book ends with Trent's own story, told in a final manuscript left and addressed to Rendell." Book rev digest

"An allegorical fantasy which develops an anti-Fascist theme. Anthony Julian, the narrator, partly by chance, partly by conscious search, finds the road to a subterranean world, the road which he believes had been taken by his father seven years before. This underworld he discovers is peopled by descendants of the ancient Roman inhabitants of Britain, now suffering under the yoke of a great fear which has forced them to surrender all individuality. Anthony is threatened with absorption into this race as his father had been, but is finally able to win his way back to the upper world of sunlight and freedom and joy." Book rev. digest

 "Francis Odell settled his farm in the old Indian Territory in 1873, building and cultivating for future generations of his family, and prospering greatly. But of his heirs, only a capable daughter-in-law loved and managed the farm as Francis had. The book traces the lives of the three sons—a cattleman, a merchant, and a writer in New York—but makes them an integral part of the farm's story, for to it they turned all their lives, through prosperity and depression. A good story of character as well as country, probably somewhat autobiographical for the treatment of the region is authentic. Two or three frank passages." Bkl.

"This sad romantic novel of unrequited love is the story of John Deere, who, to satisfy an ambitious mother, entered Lord Bringle's service to wear a beetroot-colored livery and run before his lordship's coach. John's hopeless passion for the meek governess who loves the young son of the house held him to his arduous work, though it was killing him. Joel Glass was a book dealer. But when the bottom dropped out of the market, and the big shots stopped buying rare books, he turned his agile mind to sleuthing on the side. It was harmless enough at first—a book here and a rare print there, missing from a Public Library or a lighted store. But when Abe Selig got his and the papers began to yell for blood, it became serious. Joel was on the inside and a lot happened before a certain bright idea dawned on Joel Glass

 Life and Miss Celeste. Bobbs 1937 294p $2

"The old house on Valencia street, built seventy years ago by their French father for his Spanish bride, was still the home of Miss Celeste and Miss Helene, but it was now a shabby old house among foreign neighbors . . . and meeting the taxes was an annual difficulty that occasionally forced Miss Celeste to admit the bargain hunting antique lovers from the other side of town, who coveted her heirlooms. Then a sympathetic young friend appeared to draw the sisters out of their seclusion, to introduce them to movies and automobiles, and to find the missing document that proved their ownership of disputed land. A pleasant story of the lingering genteel tradition in a gulf coast town." Bkl.

Golden wedding. Harper 1936 343p o.p. 1941

"The tragic story of a man whose Midas touch brought him wealth and power. Selfmade, insensitive, and obsessed by ambition, he was an unhappy egoist; his life narrowed with his success, until it held only power and adulation. After fifty years of married life he and his weak-willed, submissive wife are bewildered, vaguely unhappy, and conscious that in some way something essential has escaped them." Bkl.

Loads of love. Harper 1932 330p o.p. 1941

"Bessie Plummer was generous, clumsy and tactless, too stupid to realize that her exuberant good intentions were exhausting and embarrassing to the friends on whom she showered her 'loads of love' and other material gifts. The young friends she invited to her summer home were obliged to have a good time with her preposterous relatives and some unpleasant children; she fostered and then ruined a romance, changed the course of three lives, and continued happily on her blundering, uncomprehending way. The . . . sharply satirized characters make amusing reading in spite of the tragic consequences of Bessie's enterprises." Bkl.

Mr Despondency's daughter. Harper 1938 291p $2.50 (W)

The title is taken from a passage in "Pilgrim's progress" where Mr Despondency issues a warning against the "des-ponds and slavish fears" that have poisoned life for himself and his daughter, and for those who loved them. The author's aim has been "to write about a mother who is also a human being; who did, at first, clutch and cling, but who then let go . . . I have tried to show the growth of courage and honesty that changed her from a destructive clinging vine, admired by most of her world, into a freed and freeing person."

* Perennial bachelor. Grosset 338p $1

First published 1925 by Harper

"The story of an only son, born after the death of his father, and from childhood made soft and worthless by the adoration of his mother and sisters. The narrative, following the declining fortunes of the Campions of Delaware from 1860 to the present, is a panoramic comedy of American manners, catching with flashing certainty the fads and fashion which characterized the successive periods. . . Won the $2000 prize in the 1924-25 Harper novel contest." Cleveland

Sea level. Harper 1934 373p o.p. 1941

"An ironical presentation of life on a round-the-world cruise. There is very little plot, the author depending upon the idiosyncracies of her characters to furnish the motif of the book. The central character are Mary Mallory, who had taken the trip with her husband in hope of recapturing their lost happiness, and Alex Reade, a frightened little man, who squandered the savings of a lifetime on the trip, because the doctor had told him he had not much longer to live." Book rev digest

To-morrow morning. Harper 1927 305p o.p. 1941

"The tale concerns a small community, the town of Westlake. . . Kate Green's devotion to her husband, her son, her niece, and to her simple household, for all that it recurrently puts off her problematical career till 'tomorrow morning,' nevertheless brings her the sort of life for which she is best fitted. Indeed . . . the studio probably served many a better purpose than that for which it was originally designed." Sat. rev. of lit.

Golden vanity. Morrow 1934 372p o.p. 1941

"The background of the story is New York city before and just after the stock-market crash. Three women, cousins, share the center of the stage. Guna, who deliberately sets out to marry a wealthy young man, and having succeeded finds that she does not 'belong'; Geraldine, who is married to a rather footless professor, to whom she is devoted; and Mysie, the best balanced and most human of the three, who makes her own terms with life and emerges from every debacle smiling gallantly." Book rev. digest

Never ask the end. Morrow 1933 332p $2.50

"The meeting of three people, two women and a man, who have been friends in youth is the background of this story. They meet in Paris, travel to Antwerp and to London together and view Europe thru amused American eyes, but the real interest lies in the gradual unfolding of the past in the unusual friendship (unusual in books) that exists between the two women. Extremely sophisticated though, and not for all libraries." Wis. bul.

"Headlong hall" was first published 1816; "Nightmare abbey" was first published 1818

"Headlong hall" is "a Rabelaisian satire on contemporary men of letters and philosophers, who are pilloried as faddists and their views criticized by the method of reduction ad absurdum." Baker's Best "Nightmare abbey" is "an amusing farce of great literary interest, caricaturing Byron as Mr. Cypress, Coleridge as Mr. Flosky, and Shelley, in a friendly way, as the misanthropic Scythrop, with his ludicrous entanglement with two girls." Baker's Best

Tiger Juan; from the Spanish with a note by the translator Walter Starkie
Macmillan 1933 312p $2.50
"It goes back to the cruel code of honor of seventeenth century Spain for its theme, the code that a man who murders his wife to preserve his honor is more to be pitied than censured. The protagonist is the fiery, middle-aged Tiger Juan who has a stall in the market place of Pílares—an imaginary town in the Asturias. After killing his first wife in order to preserve his honor he becomes a misogynist and preaches his doctrine to all and sundry. Years later he marries a young wife and is on the point of losing her too, when he is saved in the nick of time." Book rev. digest

* Dña Perfecta; tr. by M. J. Serrano, with an introduction by W. D. Howells. Translation pub. 319p (Students' literal translations) $2
Originally published in Spanish in 1876. This translation first published by Harper in 1895
"Dona Perfecta is first of all, a story, and a great story. It deals with the passion of bigotry, as it deals with the passion of love, the passion of ambition, the passion of revenge. From the first moment to the last it is like some passage of actual events in which you cannot withhold your compassion, your abhorrence, your admiration, any more than if they took place within your personal knowledge." - Mariñela; a story of Spanish love, tr. from the Spanish by H. W. Lester; with a brief introduction by James Kendrick. Translation pub. 243p (Students' literal translations) $2
First published in English in 1892
"A blind young man of wealth is the hero; he idealizes the poor stunted peasant girl who acts as his guide into an image of beauty. Their talks on the things around them and on themselves are characterized by a quaint and artless simplicity that is very touching. The young man recovers his sight and Mariñela's dream ends abruptly." Baker's Best
- Saragossa; a story of Spanish valor; authorized tr. from the original by M. C. Smith. Little 1899 353p o.p. 1941
The valiant defense of Saragossa by the Spaniards against Napoleon's army during the long war for Spanish independence. A wealthy young patriot is in love with the daughter of the town's miser and traitor, and their lives end in tragedy when she is killed and he enters a monastery.

"A novel of rural France which won the Goncourt Prize in 1920. It is the pitiful story of a peasant girl who goes out to service in the family of a widowed farmer and lavishes all her tenderness upon his two children. Her tragedy comes when the farmer marries again. The simplicity and reticence of the style carries far, even in the translation." Cleveland

 "The career of an Oriental adventurer, who begins life as a poor fisherman on the Syrian coast, takes part in the Druses' massacre of Christians, becomes a rich merchant in Damascus, is ruined, and after grievous vicissitudes perishes at Alexandria in Arabi's revolt. Rivals 'Hajji Baba' in the perfection with which the author has captured and portrayed the Eastern mind, and depicted Eastern humanity, its humours, selfishness, fatalism, and the modes of thought usually so inscrutable to Europeans."  "The Ohio region . . . Mainly about the period 1805-1807. A story of the Burr-Blennerhasset conspiracy, leading up to the trial and acquittal of Burr. The scheme was—broadly stated—to raise a force for the purpose of conquering Texas (then Spanish territory), and also with the intention, said Burr's enemies, of setting up an independent nation." So great a man. Harper 1937 463p $3

"A long historical novel covering ten months in the life of Napoleon, from March 1808 to January 1809. The personality of Napoleon is revealed through his personal relations with Marie Walewska, Josephine, Talleyrand, Fouché, Duroc, Savary, and countless others. The resulting picture of the emperor is a complicated, not always flattering one. Will be enjoyed most by those who appreciate the minute historical details of a period and the constant play of conflicting forces, which is so evident in Napoleonic history." Bld.

Knopf 1936 324p $2.50

"In a home of staid Victorian conventionality, young Hugh Vallancourt feels the call of his gipsy blood, and again and again, in spite of his father's harsh decrees, he obeys the call and goes to his mother's people. The climax of the story is reached in Hugh's wild ride in search of freedom, twice around the Isle of Wight pursued by school authorities, police, and even the cavalry. The story may be in part autobiographical." Book rev. digest

"A comedy which points the moral, that it is vain for a man to seek reality outside the circle wherein his own character and mode of life have circumscribed him

A librarian, weary of his monotonous existence and of harassing relatives, takes advantage of an accident to assume a new personality and a more colourful life in Rome. All goes well until he falls in love;
he realizes then that he is a living lie with no place in the scheme of things.
But when he decides to fake another accident, throw off his assumed character and return home, he finds that his wife re-married and his old existence too is closed to him" Baker's Best

The old and the young. . . authorized tr.
from the Italian by C. K. Scott-Moncrieff. Dutton 1928 2v $5

"Gives a bitter and disillusioned picture of Italian social and political life in the nineties; the old have forgotten the ideals for which they fought under Garibaldi, the young inherited only selfishness. All are immersed in the slough of political intrigue and corruption. A banking scandal in Rome and a labour revolt in Sicily provide the setting, wherein repulsive figures of financiers, Politicians, and landed gentry struggle to amass money or to save their skins. Only, by contrast, the quaint
the book. 'He didn't think he merely felt'; thereby retaining the essential purity and idealism that the others had lost." Baker's Best

One, none and a hundred-thousand; a novel; tr. from the Italian by Samuel Putnam. Dutton 1933 268p $2.75

"The hero of this novel is obsessed with the thought that he can never be understood by others as he really is. He sees himself as a different person to each of his friends and acquaintances—not a single individual, but one, none, and a hundred-thousand. His attempts to establish an intrinsic identity lead to a series of strange events, and finally to a mild form of insanity. The reader's interest is in the author's thesis, a sort of psychological theory of relativity, more than in the plot or characters. The style is light and witty in spite of the seriousness of the subject. Bkl.

Outcast; a novel; authorized tr. from the Italian by Leo Ongley. Dutton 1925
334p $1

"For three generations the wife of the head of the house of Pentagora had been false to her husband. Marta, also, the innocent young wife of Rocco of the fourth generation, was hastily judged, condemned and cast out to be harried by the outside world. A masterly, moving story, in theme resembling somewhat the play 'The great Galeoto' by Echegaray." Cleveland

- Stubbs at fifty. Macmillan 1937 318p
 o.p. 1941

"After twenty-four years of teaching Mr Stubbs resigns his position in an English public school and migrates to London to try his hand at modern art criticism, pink socialism, and Bohemian living. After several months of futile striving, however, he gives up this bogus living and once more, tho in a different fashion, goes back to handling adolescent boys." Book rev. digest

Poole, Ernest, 1880-

* The harbor. Macmillan 1915 387p front y $2.50

"Using the harbor of New York both as the physical background of his story and as a symbol, Mr Poole tells the story of the life of a young man from childhood to the hour when he becomes converted to the need of the reorganization of society so as to secure social justice. A story which strikes the prevailing note of social unrest but which is hopeful in tone." Cleveland

His family. Macmillan 1917 320p $2.50

Also obtainable from Grosset at $1

"Roger Gale, who has come to New York as a lad from New Hampshire, finds himself, after his wife's death, surrounded by three half-grown daughters who embody dissimilar types of womanhood and whom he hardly knows. The multiple personality of the city is seen through the varied characters of the daughters, each of whom lives in a different New York." Pittsburgh

One of us. Macmillan 1934 285p $2.50

"From this era of the New Deal, Ted Gale, country storekeeper in the New Hampshire mountains, reviews his life and shows how it was affected by the influx of new ways and new ideas. In contrast to his life, lived always in one community and according to his father's conservative ideas, is that of Leila, his wife, a journalist who traveled the world over to see and to tell." Bkl.

With eastern eyes. Macmillan 1926 217p o.p. 1941

"American family relations between husband and wife, children and parents, as typified in the Dana family, are here interpreted through the eyes of a Russian astronomer who cannot understand the restraint of typical New England people under stress of emotion. He succeeds, however, in averting a tragedy in the lives of his friends." Bkl.

Hawk of Detroit; a novel. Reynal 1939 361p o.p. 1941

"The difficulties, jealousy, and bickerings with which Cadillac, the 'Hawk,' had to contend in trying to establish a settlement at Detroit are related here. Cadillac's kinsman, young Jules, who married a Huron chief's daughter, divides attention with Cadillac, and his character is better developed. On the whole the story is shadowy and does not come to life, but it offers valid historical material on this period of wilderness settlement, and may have considerable interest for many readers." Bkl.

Once a wilderness; a novel Reynal 1934 399p o.p. 1941

"This engaging family chronicle, opening in 1890, has for its background Mark section the 640 acre Michigan farm owned by Captain John Mark, on which he and all of his children and their families still lived. Farm activities, especially cattle breeding make a vivid background, but the lively story is about the Marks themselves, especially the lusty and vigorous patriarch, Captain John." Bkl.

Second growth; a novel. Reynal 1935 347p o.p. 1941

"Covering the period from 1913 to the present, this sequel to 'Once a wilderness' brings to a conclusion this story of a Michigan family and region. The period, coinciding with the rise of the automobile industry, makes of this novel a chapter in industrial history also." Wis. bul.

Shadows around the lake; tr. from the French by Geoffrey Sainsbury Knopf 1938 480p $3 (W)

This novel received the Grand Prize of the French Academy and the Heinemann Prize in England "It is a careful and discerning psychological study of a soul's journey through life, projected against the rather tenuous blocked-in events of the last twenty years before the outbreak of the war, and the formation of the League of Nations and its later functioning."  Weymouth sands; a novel. Simon & Schuster 1934 579p o.p. 1941
 "The background of the novel is the seaport town of Weymouth, England. The characters, a weird collection of human oddities, play their parts in a fantastic story of passion and tragedy, against this background. Among the characters are a famous clown, his mad brother who preaches to all who will listen, a naïve teacher of Latin, the clown's insane wife, a young philosopher, and an abortionist." Book rev. digest
 * Wolf Solent. Simon & Schuster. 1929 966p $4
 The story of a man who has the faculty of losing himself in nature but like all egocentrics is unable to sink his individuality in the service of a cause or in the love of an individual. Wolf Solent, thrown out of his teaching position because of a classroom outburst against modern machine civilization, receives an offer from the squire to write a 'scandalous history' of his native Dorsetshire village, a typical decadent rural community. The characters as well as his own loves and antipathies are seen through Wolf's eyes and conveyed by the stream of consciousness method. The language has romantic beauty but it is also rooted deep in the homely realities of the Dorsetshire countryside, which is pictured in all its charm." Cleveland
 Powys, Theodore Francis, 1875-
 Kindness in a corner. Viking 1930 293p $2.50
 "An idyll of the Dorsetshire countryside, the interest centering about the Reverend Silas Dottery of Tadnol Parish, Lottie his serving maid and Truggin, a Shakespearean sexton and gardener with a passion for digging graves. . . . A quaint humorous little fable on the surface, the story has a dark undercurrent of rural superstition and evil-mindedness." Cleveland

Mr Weston's good wine, with drawings by George Charlton. Viking 1928 317p o.p. 1941

"All Mr. Powys's stories have suggested allegory. . . . In the present story Mr. Powys openly adopts the allegory and employs it with great effect. Mr. Weston is a name for God, and his wines, of two kinds, are Love and Death. He comes at seven o'clock one evening to an English village; all the clocks stop, time is changed to eternity, and various strange things happen to the villagers. The rector begins to believe in God, and dies in peace, Mrs Vosper is carried down to Hell, water is turned into wine, and a young girl has intercourse with an angel of whom she has dreamt." Pratt, Mrs Eleanor Blake (Atkinson) 1899-Seedtime and harvest, by Eleanor Blake (pseud.). Putnam 1935 275p $2

"The story of a Norwegian immigrant farmer's family in the Traverse Bay region of Michigan. The main character is Else, a young daughter who is caught in a lifetime on the farm by her forced marriage to Martin, her father's helper. He is a good husband, but Else resents him, the drudgery, the many children, and ill health which prevent her going out into the world as she had dreamed of doing as a girl. Not until her own young daughter wants to go away does Else attain a kind of inner philosophy of peace." Bkl.

"A novel of the Middle ages with a theme similar to Francis Thompson's 'The hound of heaven.' Richard I plunders and sacks the fief belonging to Yves' father. Obsessed by a desire for revenge Yves sinks to incredible depths of degradation. Aside from its psychological intent, it is an excellent period romance describing all classes from courtier to beggar, and moves with a swing. Certain episodes limit its use as a historical novel for young readers." Bkl.

* Manon Lescaut, by A. F. Prévost; and Carmen [by] Prosper Mérimée. Dutton 216p (Everyman's lib) 90c

"Manon Lescaut" written in 1731, is also obtainable from Dutton at $2

In "Manon Lescaut" "a young student of theology becomes infatuated with a young woman, a courtesan by nature, and gives up his career to live with her. He is separated from her by his father. Later, he sees her about to be transported to Louisiana . . . and forsakes all to accompany her thither. . . . She dies, and he hollows her a grave in the sand with his hands, and lies upon it to await death, from which welcome end he is saved to pass his life in sadness." Miller

"Carmen" first published in English in 1887, is "well known from Bizet's opera, which is founded on it. . . . The tale is pure romance, the method calmly realistic, and it is a masterpiece of pure objective art. The scenery and costumes of Spain add to its picturesque qualities." Baker's Best

Fay's circus. Norton 1931 314p o.p. 1941

This story with an Australian background is "a record of a circus family's life. Gina Fay, the heroine, was injured when a young girl during an equestrian act. She later became, in spite of deformity, the director and owner of Fay's circus, managing her dominating father, a born showman, and looking after the entire family. The country through which the circus wagons travelled day after day and the family's life in the open and under the tents are realistically described." Bkl.

"A pretty girl from an English town goes to London in search of work—and the youth who had so recently fallen in love with her follows after. How fate constantly interferes with their finding each other as the girl changes from one job to another, is related in an entertaining story rich in detailed observations of the working class. The story closes with a melodramatic climax." N.Y. libraries

Wonder hero. Harper 1933 337p $1

This "story is part satire, part social criticism and part mildly Dickensian humor. The satire is aimed at the sensational press, particularly at the charlatanism of popular newspapers in their capacity of making and unmaking popular heroes. . . Two puppets, Charlie and Ida, are a week's sensation in the vulgar press. They are fêted as national celebrities. They live in the same luxury hotel, talk over the same radio station, go to theatres, night clubs and cocktail parties. Of course, the expected happens. Both drop from public sight, but their private problems remain." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

 The Asiatics; a novel, with an introduction by Carl Van Doren. Readers club 371p illus $1.50
 First published 1935 by Harper
 "A combination travel book and novel which follows the picaresque adventures of a young American, the narrator, across the continent of Asia from Syria to the China Sea." Book rev digest Night of the poor. Harper 1939 359p $2.50
 "A seventeen-year-old boy, hitch hiking his way from Wisconsin to Texas, is the central character in this episodic novel. On the way, Tom crosses Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana. Some of the time he is alone; sometimes he has for companions homeless, poverty-stricken wretches. He witnesses poverty, lust, murder, and a lynching, all graphically described." Book rev. digest

 ‡ Remembrance of things past. . . Random house 2v $5
 Translated by C. K. Scott Moncrieff and Frederick A. Blossom
 Contents: v 1. Swann's way; Within a budding grove; The Guermantes way. v2. Cities of the plain; The captive; The sweet cheat gone; The past recaptured "Into this long and complex psychological study and panorama of an epoch in social history there has been introduced some of the finest writing of our time on the subject of art in general, painting, music, acting, literature, architecture, and the like, as well as on our reaction to these arts. . . And the long series as a whole is really an experiment—remarkably successful—in making the author's past live again in the eternity of art." Lenrow
 The individual parts are available separately as follows. Dates given are those of first American publication

 The romance of a married woman in her early forties and of the problems of her four grown children. Boston, in 1929, is the scene of the story. Continues the story begun in "White fawn"
 Stella Dallas Houghton 1923 304p $2.50
 "In which Stella Dallas rises above her supposed vulgarity for the love of her beautiful and sensitive daughter, the child of an uncongenial marriage. Appeared in the American magazine." Bkl White fawn Houghton 1931 390p $2.50
 Also obtainable from Grosset
 "To Lisa Vale, Fabia, her daughter, was like a white fawn unlike the herd with which she must mix. And the Vale traditions to Fabia were simply conventional forms which were easier to break than to live up to. That Dan Regan was out of her sphere made little difference to her, but opposition of both families make the story what it is: sincere and quietly dramatic." Wis. bul

"William Slocum, a New England lad of 14, is the son of a Quaker shipbuilder. The story opens in the year 1830 with Cocky, a one-eyed sailor with a past, being rescued from a murderous band of Portuguese seamen by William's father. Thereafter he is devoted to the family and one night while he and William are guarding a new ship at anchor in the bay the Portuguese return and kidnap both the men and the boat. They are taken on a long voyage in search of buried treasure, the location of which is known to Cocky. How they escape from their captors and find the treasure make a thrilling story." Cleveland

The "cowboy hero works for a newspaper, and runs his own ranch on the side. The paper is owned by a girl, and there are all sorts of undercurrents of trouble over old Spanish land grants, papers in the newspaper files, feuds between big owners and small and a gang that uses the girl as a decoy. But between them, the cowboy and his girl employer clean up the gang." Kirkus

"A foreign philanderer in Tokio arranges an outing for a Japanese girl who has taken his fancy. An obsequious Japanese merchant horns in on the party, announces himself as host and invites other guests. His purpose is to prevent the consummation of the honorable-foreigner's desires and the scandal that would follow. The story of the outing as told with artful frankness by different members of the group is a blend of humor and satire with more than a dash of eroticism, and a curiously wistful quality—particularly where the young girl is concerned—that resolves into pathos as her day ends." "A simple story of life in the Florida backwoods, in the scrub country where the hard conditions of pioneer life still exist. Lant Jacklin, the hero of 'South Moon Under,' is a modern descendant of Deer-slayer and the Indian fighters, a keen hunter, a solitary unable to adjust himself to the social requirements of the community. . . There is surprisingly little to the story aside from the long accounts of Lant's life in the woods. . . Mrs. Rawlings brings her fullest powers of observation to bear upon the scrub itself, on Lant's long hunting trips, his trapping and logging expeditions, his encyclopedic knowledge of the woods." "A simple story of simple (but by no means uncomplex) people . . . living in the scrub regions near the St John River in Florida. . . The period is the decades after the Civil War. . . This is a boy's book, or rather it is a book about a world in which the important happenings are part of a boy's life and have to be understood by him. But it does not lack emotional interest. . . It is not a novel in the ordinary sense. The plot is very simple, and in the latter third of the book the reader will have to get his excitement out of two great hunts and the constant interest of the personalities." First published 1861. A small portion appeared in "Once a week" July-September 1859 under title "A good fight"

"As a piece of historical narrative, crowded with characters, brilliantly pictorial, and based on indefatigable study, this is one of our finest novels of the Middle Ages, taking the hero from the Netherlands through Germany and France to Italy and Rome, and depicting the state of all these countries (1465-85). Attempts with amazing success to reconstruct the whole life of the time. The hero is said to be the father of Erasmus, and his story to be true in the main" Baker's Best

 "A novel based upon Napoleon's life at St Helena, in which strictly historical facts are supplemented with delightfully dramatic imagination. The characters are Napoleon, feverishly dictating a history of his brilliant campaigns, the members of Napoleon's household kowtowing to his every wish and opinion, and the governor of the Island and his fellow officers, who constantly fear their prisoner's escape. The daily life of this group, with its internal gossip, jealousies, and bickerings, is told in readable detail." Bkl.

Also available from Grosset at 85c

Followed by "Road back"

"An account of warfare on the western front, written by a German who entered service directly from school at the age of eighteen. The book is powerful, not so much because of the unspeakable horrors which fill its pages, but because of the matter-of-factness, the terrible stoicism with which they are related." Wis. bul.

* Three comrades; tr. from the German by A. W. Wheen. Little 1937 479p $2.50

"Three German ex-soldiers, none of them over thirty, in the year 1928 made a precarious living from a garage and car repair business. They were comrades and shared their resources, and the advantages of their beloved car, Karl. On one of their excursions in Karl they met the girl Pat, and all fell in love with her. But it was Robby who was completely her slave, and the story of their love and Pat's struggle with tuberculosis and her death complete the story." Book rev. digest

* The peasants; a tale of our own times.

Knopf 1924-25 4v in 1 $3.50

Contents: v1 Autumn, v2 Winter; v3
Spring; v4 Summer. Translated by M.
H. Dziewicki

"The chronicle of a Polish village under the old Russian rule. It follows the daily round of peasant life through the circle of the year—toils and pleasures and customs and the drama of human loves and hates. Tragedy centers in the person of the heroine who comes between father and a son, rivals for her love." Book

A sordid picture of a Polish industrial center in the 1880's

"In the midst of this hateful, rapacious, inexpressibly vulgar community of upstart Jews and Germans, almost submerged and completely exhausted in the unequal struggle, a remnant of the original Polish race but hardly holds its ground. . . . [The book] is the history of the material progress and spiritual extinction of Charles Boro-wiecki, a man of the old Polish aristocracy, who, accepting the new order, disciplines his mind and hardens his nature to succeed in it." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

"Pete Johnson, the breezy, cheerful hero of this tale of the West, and his partner, Stanley Mitchell, have great trouble in trying to secure their right to a copper mine which Johnson has discovered in the wilds of Arizona. They have to combat a band of clever, quick witted rogues, headed by Mayer Zurich, and a cousin of Stanley's, a crook lawyer, is also working against them. Pete is wide awake, however, and an adept with a gun, so there is some very sharp shooting, a fund of cowboy humor, and clever double-crossing, in which Pete and his partner come thru triumphant." Book rev. digest

"The broad background of the whole city of New York is the canvas upon which Mr Rice has set his characters. They are Fanny, drunken ex-actress and world beauty, mother of three sons; Christopher, ruthless magnate; Greg, man-about-town;
and Gay, liberal professor at Columbia university. Each of the sons becomes deeply involved with a woman. Thru the complexities of the relationships of a large group of people, we are introduced to New Yorkers in every stratum of society. In the end Christopher's employees strike and Greg murders his wife's lover.
The novel ends abruptly without disclosing the results of these two happenings."

Man who insulted Somersville. Harper
1938 357p $2.50

"The story of a sardonic revenge after death. A man whom his home town had scorned for his illegitimacy died without making a will, knowing that his wealth could be shared only by those who admitted relationship to him. Unsuspected scandals come to light, for the town's snobs and its outcasts were the dead man's kin, and intrigue flourished. For readers who appreciate a satirical picture of small town pettiness. Long and sometimes monotonous." Bkl.

The life story of Richard Mahony from his early days in the gold fields of Australia thru prosperity of middle age and the tragedy of his deterioration in later life

Getting of wisdom. rev ed Norton 1931 275p o.p. 1941

"Originally published in 1910, this story of life in an Australian boarding school is now [1931] issued in revised form. At the age of twelve Laura is sent to the school and for four years lives in that narrow pedantic world, suffering from the cruelty and snobbery of adolescent girls and from her own vague and uncomprehended ambitions." Clarissa; or, The history of a young lady; condensed by C. H. Jones. Holt 515p $1.75

Also available in a four volume edition in the "Everyman's library" (Dutton ea 90c)

First published 1748

"Richardson's masterpiece—the history of a beautiful woman sacrificed to a heartless libertine—written in letters. . . Dr Johnson said that a single letter in one of his novels contained more knowledge of the human heart than the whole of 'Tom Jones.' The book had enormous influence on European literature." Baker's Best

History of Sir Charles Grandison; ed. by Thomas Archer. Dutton 554p $1.50

First published 1753

"Undertaken as a retort to those critics who thought Lovelace, the undoer of Clarissa, too attractive; Richardson's idea of a complete gentleman. Sir Charles is a wealthy and accomplished man of fashion, endowed with every possible virtue, adored by women, etc. He marries a heroine of corresponding perfection. Like Clarissa, it was originally published in several volumes, and contains about fifty characters portrayed with enormous detail." Baker's Best

Riddell, Mrs Florence

Silent world. Lippincott 1934 320p o.p. 1941

"The 'silent world' is the world of the deaf, to which the principal characters in this novel belong. Christopher was made deaf in his childhood by an accident, while his wife Dawn was born deaf. As children they both attended a school which was conducted in the best scientific manner, by a woman of superior understanding and sympathy, and one of the most interesting parts of the book is that which describes her methods. Several years after their marriage, Christopher is cured, and from the time he becomes a normal-hearing person, the bond between himself and his wife weakens and is finally broken by his falling in love with another woman. An intensely moving book, both as a story and as a psychological study of the deaf, whose affliction, in the author's opinion, cuts them off quite as completely from normal experience as blindness does." Bargain basement. Appleton-Century 1932 358p o.p. 1941

"This is the romance of an Earl's daughter working in a department store and falling in love with the illegitimate grandson of her godfather, Lord Henry Carreimere. Much of the plot is extremely unlikely, but pleasant and entertaining" Wis. bul

Guests arrive. Appleton-Century 1935 366p $2.50

"Cleo Longman, a young Englishwoman, is left a legacy by a noted pianist, who is eventually revealed as her father. The legacy consists of a sum of money and an old fort on an island near Venice, long used by the pianist as a place for retreat. The financial part of the legacy proves too meager to keep up the island home so Cleo turns it into a resort for paying guests. Cleo's relationships with her guests, two love affairs, a tragedy, and several minor incidents make up a highly entertaining romantic tale." Book rev. digest

Pamela's spring song. Appleton-Century 1930 371p o.p. 1941

"Why not spend spring in the Tyrol?" asked the posters. A romantic story full of colorful scenes and engaging characters." Wis. bul.

Pilgrim Cottage. Appleton-Century 1933 397p $2.50

"Ann was a dancer out of a job; Philip hoped to become a writer. When their fortunes were at lowest ebb the two met in Venice and promptly fell in love. There Mrs Cressington, a wealthy American, discovered them and sent them home to their native England, to live in the charming little house, called Pilgrim Cottage, which she had bought on an impulse. Shortly after, Philip's play was a success in London, and Ann went to Russia to help in the establishing of a ballet school. But nothing could shake their love for Pilgrim Cottage for long, and they returned from their triumphs to its peace and quiet." Book rev. digest

* Annette and Sylvie. . . tr. from the French by Ben Ray Redman. Holt 1925 331p (Soul enchanted v1) $2.50

"Annette and Sylvie" is the prelude of a work in several volumes entitled 'The soul enchanted.' Six months before the story opens Annette Rivière had lost her father and she is still crushed by her loss. She is alone in the world but well equipped financially and intellectually. In going over her father's papers Annette discovers that she has a sister living in Paris, unacknowledged by her father. She immediately seeks out Sylvie and brings her home to live. The story has to do with the relations of the two sisters and with Annette's first love affair, begun most happily but terminated, tho not before she had given herself completely to her lover, because she feared his egoism and possessiveness." * World in birth . . . tr. from the French by Amalia de Alberti. Holt 1934 602p (Soul enchanted v5) $2.75

Sequel to "Death of a world"

"In its six hundred pages Rolland attempts an apotheosis of his heroine, the 'soul enchanted.' Annette aids and abets a number of younger people in their random struggles for very ill-defined ends. She witnesses the murder of her son in a brawl with Italian Fascists. She encourages another youth to throw his life away in a gesture equally futile but even more poetical. And, finally, she convinces herself that, dying at a ripe age of angina, she is 'taking her share in the holocaust of her sons.'" Book rev. digest

Boat of longing, a novel; tr. from the Norwegian Laengseleens baat, by N. O. Solum. Harper 1933 304p o.p. 1941

"A moving and beautifully written story of the life of simple fisher folks of Nordland and of the journey of Nils, the son, to America. It was published in Norway in 1922, and Lincoln Colcord, in the introduction to 'Giants in the earth' called it 'Rølvaag's most introspective and poetical effort up to the present time.' The tender affection with which the home scenes are treated suggest that they are autobiographical." Wis. bul.

Giants in the earth; a saga of the prairie; y tr. from the Norwegian. Harper 1927 465p $2.50

"The Norwegian immigrant as a pioneer in America is finely viewed through the characterization of Per Hansa to whom the Dakota prairie meant life, exhilarating struggle, and freedom, and through the characterization of Beret, his well-loved wife, to whom it brought loneliness, terror, and despair. Professor Rølvaag, a Norwegian who has lived in the United States . . . first wrote his story in his native language and then translated it into English." Pittsburgh

"It is half an adventure story, a realistic description of the physical facts of the homesteader's life 50 miles from anywhere on the Dakota plains, and half a penetrating study of pioneer psychology; and it is hard to say which is better done." Allan Nevins in Sat. rev. of lit.

* Peder Victorious; a novel; tr. from the y Norwegian; English text by N. O. Solum and the author. Harper 1929 350p o.p. 1941

"Carries on the characters of 'Giants in the earth,' the interest centering in Peder Victorious and Beret, the boy's mother, against the background of a community no longer intensely struggling with the soil, but adapting itself to the ways of the new country, or resisting adaptation as Beret continues to do. The boy Peder, with his changing ideas and his ardent pursuit of girls is a foil for the character of Beret, perhaps the most finely conceived personality in the book." N.Y. libraries

* Pure gold; English text by Sivert Erdahl, and the author. Harper 1930 346p o.p. 1941

"A Norwegian farming community in Minnesota is the setting for this tragic story of Louis and Lizzie Hougum. A gleaming gold piece implanted the passion of avarice into their lives, dominated them and finally led to their destruction. It is an absorbing study of miserliness, of two souls ruined by their fanatical lust for gold, a story which is logically developed step by step until it reaches its stark and grim finality." Ontario library review

* Their fathers' God; tr. from the Norwegian by T. M. Ager. Harper 1931 338p o.p. 1941

"At the close of 'Peder Victorious' . . . Peder, son of Norwegian Lutheran parents—Per Hansa and Beret of 'Giants in the earth' . . . marries Susie, a pretty Irish Roman-Catholic. The unsuccessful struggle of these two young people, with entirely different religious backgrounds, to adapt themselves to each other is the theme of this book. Peder's ideas shock his wife and hers repel him. Peder takes an active interest in politics and on this note, with serious family dissension, the book closes." Bkl.

Part two affords moderate relief in the more normal journal of Jallez, a young newspaperman who observes the world and describes his mild love for a young working girl. "This story, tho apparently complete in itself, is but the opening chapter of a novel which promises to reach considerable dimensions—a Comédie Humaine having for its background the world of Paris. The first part of the present volume deals with the detached episodes of a single day—October the sixth, 1908. In the second part of the volume the various themes converge and attention centers upon Quinette, the bookbinder, who out of pure curiosity had allowed himself to become dangerously involved in the affairs of a murderer. We see, in Book Six, 'The Meek', the Bastide family plunging toward the lower depths when Monsieur Bastide loses the job he has held for twenty years. . . . Three pairs of silk stockings; a novel of the life of the educated class under the soviet; tr. by Leonide Zarine; ed. by Stephen Graham Scribner 1931 344p o.p. 1941

"A remarkably realistic and convincing picture of life in Moscow under the soviet regime. The leading character, a member of the intellectual class, has allied himself with the communists for the sake of material success at the price of his ideals and moral integrity. The plot concerns a love affair with the wife of his best friend and closes with her death—whether she dies by suicide or murder is left for the reader to decide." Bkl.

"Margot was plain and gentle and easily managed. Richard, her handsome husband, left her for another woman after just a few weeks of marriage, and it was not long before his domineering sister, Clara, had Margot completely in her power. For years Margot lived quietly in her London home, always ruled by Clara's firm hand. Then Nicholas, Clara's younger brother, came home from India. He found a kindred spirit in Margot and proceeded to take her part. Under his kindly protection she had a belated reawakening and before long she proved that the family fiction of 'protecting Margot' was completely out of date." Book rev. digest

His official fiancée. Dodd 1914 384p
o p. 1941

"A novel on a new theme, or, at least, a clever variation of an old theme. A man who finds it advisable for business reasons to appear to be engaged for a time, offers one of his typists the post of official fiancée for one year. . . Their engagement of course necessitates meetings outside of business hours and each one is let in for a number of startling revelations concerning the other. The novel is brightly written and altho the end is long foreseen, will probably hold the reader's interest." Book rev. digest

"We find ourselves in the presence of a whimsical, humorous, cultured and very womanly woman, with a pleasant, old-fashioned liking for homeliness and simplicity, with a wise husband, three merry babies, a few friends, a gardener, an old German house to repose in, a garden to be happy in, an agreeable literary gift and a slight touch of cynicism." Academy

Expiation, by Elizabeth (pseud.). Doubleday 1929 362p o.p. 1941

"Ernest, dying, deals his plump and kindly Milly a cruel blow. For he leaves his fortune to a home for fallen women with the sinister comment, 'My wife will know why.' Milly does know why. . . Wistful and frightened, she tries to make expiation for her sin. Her efforts make a tempest in the family teapot, and only the wise old grandmother remains her friend." Book rev. digest

Father, by Elizabeth (pseud.). Doubleday 1931 339p o.p. 1941

"At tea time father, who was sixty-five, walked in with a nineteen-year-old bride. Jennifer, his daughter, who was thirty-three and had been a slave to father's whims for twelve years, decided that it was time for a little freedom. She rented a rose-covered cottage in the country and despite some minor troubles with the clergy, proceeded to have a glorious time. Suddenly in walked father, this time minus the bride. After a short period of reincarceration for Jennifer, Fate and one of the clergy proved very kind." Book rev. digest

"Simple, commonplace, crude and without an 'h' in her speech, Sally was amiable and so impossibly beautiful that she created havoc wherever she went. The story of the trouble her mishaps and adventures caused her doting but irritated young husband is amusingly told in this author's inimitable manner." Bkl.

The jasmine farm, by Elizabeth (pseud.). Doubleday 1934 322p o.p. 1941

"When the wealthy and gracious Lady Midhurst, whose obsession was chastity and whose guest list never included a questionable name, learned that her adored daughter had been happily loving a married man for several years, she fled broken-hearted to her little jasmine farm in France. What happened in that primitive, lonely, but peaceful spot, to which various interested persons (especially the lover's mother-in-law) came, forms the last and most readable part of the book." Bkl.

* Wreck of the Grosvenor; illus. by Mead y Schaeffer. Dodd 349p (International classics) $2

First published 1875

A vivid portrayal of life in the British merchant marine. Told by the second mate of the ship "Grosvenor," it relates the causes of dissatisfaction among the crew, and exposes the harsh treatment of the men by a brutal and inhuman captain and first mate. The trouble reaches a climax in mutiny, the captain and mate are killed, the ship sunk, and a few faithful to the second mate are rescued by a passing steamer

Sackville-West, Victoria Mary, 1892-* All passion spent. Doubleday 1931 294p o.p. 1941

"When Lady Slane, after the death of her famous husband, shocks her family by going to live by herself in a little house in Hampstead, she is for the first time in her eighty-eight years asserting her right to live her own life. The year of quiet reminiscences there is not without exciting moments, for a man who has loved her silently for sixty years renews his friendship, tells her of his love, then suddenly dies, and leaves her his enormous fortune. What she does with this fortune is another instance of her self-assertion. Gentle, charming Lady Slane, her family, and her friends, drawn with wit and skill in this tale of graceful old age, create an impression of subtlety and beauty." Bkl.

Dark island. Doubleday 1934 308p o.p. 1941

"A somber story, somewhat unreal in effect, of an English girl, fascinated since childhood by an island she visited only once. After a marriage and divorce, she married, for the sake of the island, its sadistic owner, and went to live there. Both the wife and the partly insane husband were jealous of the island and three lives were sacrificed to it. The story moves fast." Bkl.

* Edwardians. Doubleday 1930 314p o.p. 1941

"The setting of this story of Edwardian England is the beautiful old manor-house of Chevron. The characters are grouped around Sebastian, the young heir to the dukedom, and his mother, a famous hostess of the day. Individuals count for less in the novel than the beautiful old house and all that it represents—a decadent but decorative society. The close of the story, marked by King George's coronation, finds the young duke breaking with the traditions that have bound him, not unwillingly, and starting a new era for himself." Book rev. digest

"The Edwardians" is of undoubted excellence from two points of view. First, it is a magnificent portrait of a class and an era. Secondly, it is remarkable for its excellent prose style." Springfield Republican

Family history. Doubleday 1932 315p o.p. 1941

"The heroine of this novel of contemporary England is a beautiful young widow approaching forty who falls ardently and tragically in love with a rising young Labor M. P. fifteen years her junior, the friend and idol of her son. Their love is mutual but complicated by the disparity of their ages, which Evelyn is never for a moment able to forget, and by differences, as well, in background and ideals. The seven months' passionate friendship comes to its sad close, the young son looking on, pained and puzzled." Book rev. digest

 "A remarkably vivid picture of a remote 'Cajun community on a delta of the Mississippi river, presented partly through the thoughts of Marie, widow of Toussaint Molinère, and partly by conversations. On this day preceding her marriage to Jean, she had refrained from her usual occupation of seining out of deference to the conventions expected of a bride-to-be. The happenings of that day along the water front run the gamut of human passions and Madam's interpretation is that of an untutored, tolerant woman, wise in the ways of man.  * Katrina; tr. from the Swedish by Naomi Walford; Farrar 1937 367p $1
 "Katrina, a Finnish girl, yielded to the impetuous wooing of a strange sailor and went with him to a new life on the Åland islands. Here she found, instead of the comfortable home she had been promised, a miserable hut on barren rock. Johann, her husband, was a weak, improvident braggart, who sailed away and left her to provide for herself. . . As the years go on, love and a measure of respect for her shiftless husband took the place of the resentment in Katrina's heart, and she worked for him as well as for her children, until, in her lonely old age, all that remained was the hope of finding him after death. A fine novel written with an effortless simplicity that is effective and moving." Bkl.

 y First published 1928 by Simon & Schuster
 "Felix Salten's story of deer life in the woods that fringe the Danube is neither sentimental nor used to point a moral. It derives its dramatic value, legitimately, from the animals' fear and terror of their historic enemy—man. Whatever plot there is follows the simple curve of animal existence through the changing seasons. . . In his absorption with details the author has brought his whole forest to life, yet these details are selected with a poet's intuition for delicacy of effect." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

 y Florian, the emperor's stallion; tr. by Erich Posselt and Michel Kraike, Bobbs 1934 343p o.p. 1941
 "Through the story of the emperor's magnificent white stallion, Florian, and his adoring companions Bosco, the terrier, and Anton, his stable boy, and the various people who own, train or admire Florian, an unusual picture of Austrian court surroundings from 1901 to 1921 is given. The imperial stud farm where the finest Lipizan horses were bred and the royal stables in Vienna, with all their colorful detail, make a romantic story. The gradual decline of Florian's social status from champion to cab horse and then to cart horse is sensitively told, with occasional sentimentality." Bkl.

"In 'Memoirs of a fox-hunting man' a timid English boy grows to manhood under the fostering care of Dixon, Aunt Evelyn's kindly reticent groom, who trains him to ride and hunt. A mild, agreeably autobiographical chronicle of English sportsmanship up to 1914." Cleveland

In "Memoirs of an infantry officer" life in the trenches, in combat, behind the lines, on the march is portrayed

"'Sherston's progress' brings quiet and war oddly together as Mr. Sassoon's fox-hunting man spends 1918 partly in the peaceful setting of an English sanatorium, and partly actively fighting in Egypt and the French trenches." Cincinnati

"Memoirs of an infantry officer" and "Sherston's progress" are also available separately (Doubleday ea $1)

Folkhouse; the autobiography of a home; decorations by Allan McNab Appleton-Century 1932 265p $2
"Readers with a taste for honest sentiment will like this story of Martin and Ann who marry, go to housekeeping in the old mill, have children, and meet all the sorrows and joys that go to the making of a home." Wis. bul.

Four ducks on a pond. Harper 1928 380p o.p. 1941

"A wholesome romance beginning with Tad's early life on a farm, which had been unhappy and filled with drudgery. She works her way through college and meets and marries Danny, whose chief ambition is to become a farmer. This is the story of the fight between her loyalty to Danny and her fear of loneliness and primitive conditions in a little cabin in a lumber camp." Bkl takes to the road. Her romantic and sentimental adventures make a pleasant little story of the kind many readers ask for." Wis. bul

Seven miles to Arden. Harper 1916 243p
o.p. 1941

"Patsy O'Connell of the Irish National players is left stranded in New York when the company disbands. But Patsy has no time to worry about troubles of her own when other people need help. And the thought of a young man in trouble and in need of a friend to trust him is enough to send her off on a journey in search of him. He is to be found she learns at Arden, seven miles away, and she sets out thither. But Arden seems an elusive town and difficult to arrive at, and on the way she meets a tinker. It is out of these circumstances that a pretty romance grows." Book rev. digest

The silver sixpence. Harper 1921 331p
o.p. 1941

"A story of the theater and of the actual business of putting on plays. Eudora Post inherits from her father, a professor of philology, a fortune of four millions, the existence of which had been kept a secret from her. The will provides that she shall not receive the full sum till she has profitably invested an initial payment of twenty thousand dollars. She elects to put this to use in backing a play by a young and entirely unknown author. Appeared originally in the Ladies' Home Journal." Book rev. digest

"Occupying a position midway between that of the white people of the plantation house and the negro field hands, are the free mulattoes, who for generations have lived on the land inherited from French ancestors, maintaining a proud independence. In particular it is the story of Fanie, whose sacrifices for her illegitimate white child lead to ostracism from her people. Simply told and appealing, and should not give offence, in spite of the frank treatment demanded by certain situations." Wis. bul

"A combination mystery story and novel in which the principal characters of 'Gaudy night' and earlier stories appear. Intricate plot; able characterization and writing; rather erudite at times. Will be welcomed by Sayers readers, but will not interest the usual mystery enthusiast." Bkl.

Clouds of witness, by D. L. Sayers; and The documents in the case, by D. L. Sayers and Robert Eustace (pseud). Harcourt 2v in 1 $1.89

"Clouds of witness" first published 1927; "Documents in the case" first published 1930

"'Clouds of witness' is an account of the trial for murder of the Duke of Denver before the House of Lords, and of the manner in which his brother, Lord Peter, proves his innocence, even flying the Atlantic to do so. 'The Documents in the case' proves that George Harrison's death, supposedly of fungoid poisoning, was not accidental." Hunting

Dawson pedigree; and Lord Peter views the body. Harcourt 2v in 1 $1.89

Contains two titles "Dawson pedigree," published 1928 (appeared in England under title "Unnatural death") and "Lord Peter views the body." The latter is a collection of the following short stories. Abominable history of the man with copper fingers; Entertaining episode of the article in question; Fascinating problem of Uncle Me-leager's will; Fantastic horror of the cat in the bag; Unprincipled affair of the practical joker; Undignified melodrama of the bone of contention; Vindictive story of the footsteps that ran; Bibulous business of a matter of taste; Learned adventure of the dragon's head; Piscatorial farce of the stolen stomach; Unsolved puzzle of the man with no face; Adventurous exploit of the cave of Ali Baba

* Dorothy L. Sayers. Omnibus. . . Harcourt 3v in 1 $1.98

Published as follows: "Whose body?" 1928; "Unpleasantness at the Bellona club," 1928; "Suspicious characters," 1931. This last title was published in England under title "Five red herrings." They are all stories of Lord Peter Wimsey

* Gaudy night. . . Harcourt 1936 469p
$2.50

Also available from Harcourt for $1.49
"The solving of the mystery created during the celebrations of Gaudy Night at Oxford university makes an interesting novel. Aside from the mystery, the psychological problem of what happens to the ordinarily sensible minds of a group of women who become suspicious of each other, is excellently handled. Characterization is good and the descriptions of life in a women's college in England are extremely interesting. Oxford town itself stands out clearly." Wis. bul

Can't get a red bird. Harper 1929 408p o.p. 1941

"Johnny Carr, son of a tenant cotton-grower, struggles to manhood in grinding poverty. Taking over the support of the family at the age of eleven, he refuses to accept the shiftless philosophy embodied in the song, 'Can't get a red bird, blue bird'll do,' and finally achieves economic freedom, organizing the cotton growers to their own advantage. Interesting as a novel and as a picture of economic conditions among the Texas cotton growers which reduce tenants to the state of serfs." Cleveland

Impatient Griselda. Harper 1927 456p o.p. 1941

"The first Lilith bewitched a sober clergyman and married him. She died bearing her first child, a second Lilith. Irene married the bereaved husband whom she had long loved, because he needed her, not for himself, but to care for the child. There were four children of the second marriage but the father favored Lilith above them all. Irene resented this pushing aside of her own loved daughter and tried to make up to Tina for her father's neglect. But the tragedy of the mother's life was destined to be repeated in the daughter's, as the second Lilith, hurt by her lover's faithlessness steals Tina's Dan from her and dies leaving a daughter for Dan to idolize and Tina to bring up." Schachner, Nathan

By the dim lamps; a novel. Stokes 1941 577p $2.75 (W)

A "picture of conditions in Louisiana and New Orleans during the Civil War and the reconstruction period. The central figure is a farsighted patriotic Southerner who, in the interest of his country, follows an unpopular course that causes much conflict and many emotional clashes." Huntting

Schechter, Abel Alan, 1907-

y "Go ahead, Garrison!" A story of news broadcasting. Dodd 1940 237p $2
 "A story of news broadcasting set forth in fiction form as the experiences, the ups and downs, and final success of a young broadcaster, Pat Garrison. Among the events Pat reports on are a submarine accident, a hurricane, an eruption of Vesuvius, and the first raid on Paris." Book rev. digest

Ekkehard, a tale of the 10th century Dutton xx,391p (Everyman's lib) 90c

First published in English 1872 This edition translated by Helena Easson

"The book is an authentic picture of the tenth century in Swabia. A vivid and faithful presentation of a picturesque age, in which the elements of poetry and history are exquisitely blended. It has been called the 'one classic example' of the historical novel to come from Germany." Pratt alcove

Schendel, Arthur van, 1874-

The "Johanna Maria"; tr. from the Dutch by B. W. Downs; with an introduction by Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch. Longmans 1935 223p o.p. 1941

"The story of a crack Amsterdam clipper and her sailmaker, a ship and seaman who grow old together. . . 'The full-rigged three-master Johanna Maria was launched from the yard at Oostenburg in Amsterdam one day in February, 1865.' Young Jacob Brouwer, master sailmaker, fell in love with her as she glided down the ways. He threw in his lot with hers forever, and in time his will to own her dominated every other purpose of his life." Sat. rev. of lit.

Scherr, Marie

Schlumberger, Jean, 1877-

Saint Saturnin; tr. from the French by Dorothy Bussy. Dodd 1932 326p o.p. 1941

"The novel is both a study of French family life and tradition and the drama of an old man's mental decay after years of upright living. On the death of his gentle wife William Colombe, the patriarch of the family, hands over its interests to his elder son, but his sense of power remains while his progressive insanity works havoc with the family fortune. The three children, thru respect for the father they have so long honored are helpless, unwilling to interfere. In nine months after the death of his wife Colombe has completely collapsed and with him a large part of his noble estate of Saint Saturnin." Book rev. digest

Schlump; the story of a German soldier; told by himself; tr. from the German by Maurice Samuel. Harcourt 1929 299p o.p. 1941

"An unvarnished account of the daily life of a shrewd, good-natured seventeen-year-old boy who, because of a shortage of men, is put in charge of a French village in occupied territory. Later he is transferred to the trenches and sees all the horror of war. His amours are related frankly, but they are a small part of a large pattern." Cleveland

"There are deliciously humorous passages in the book, and it is altogether a highly readable account of a soldier's life." Bookman

Schmidt, Mrs Sarah (Lindsay)

y New land; a novel for boys and girls McBride 1933 317p $2

"An account of how the young Morgan twins and their father make a fresh start in life on New Land in Wyoming. They are disillusioned at the start, but through pluck and hard work they finally realize a dream of a farm of their own. Rivalry in agricultural projects conflict with the 'big man' of the section, who is a rascal, and a Wyoming blizzard provide sufficient suspense for a thrilling story." Hunting

Schneider, Manfred, 1884-

Goya; a portrait of the artist as a man; (tr. by Clement Greenberg, Mrs Emma Ashton and Jay Dratler). Knight pubs. 1936 337p illus $2.75

"Fictionized biography of Francisco de Goya, born of Aragonian peasant stock in 1746, who became famous as court painter to two Bourbon monarchs. The author stresses the lusty side of Goya's character." Book rev. digest

"He appears, not as one Goya, but as four, and the reader of this fictionalized biography must peep at the rogue, the lover, the official and the human conscience by turns to arrive at complete knowledge." N.Y. Times

"Dr Graesler was forty-eight when his older sister, who had kept house for him, committed suicide. As he was sailing back to Germany from the health resort where he was official physician, he was stirred by vague memories of a woman's face. . . Overwhelmed with a desire for companionship Dr Graesler went to a distant town, determined to marry a girl, Katharina, with whom he had had an affair. Only a few days after his arrival Katharina died of scarlet fever, contracted from one of the doctor's patients. Then the doctor married a young widow and with her returned to the health resort." near the servants. Her mother had been a baroness and her father was an officer in the army, but after Lieutenant Fabiani went insane Theresa herself was left with neither money nor position. She thereupon took two steps which determined her whole life: she became the mistress of a young officer and she applied for work as a governess. Her life from that time was a long succession of lovers and pupils, complicated toward the end by troubles with her illegitimate son, who had grown into a thief." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

- y Fighting coach; a football story Morrow 1940 245p $2

"A football story about a plucky coach who came from a small college to a large one, found crookedness, bullying, and obstinacy, and made good by the end of the first season. He had won the confidence of his team, the student body, and even the trustees. Some men will enjoy this; most boys will prefer a story of playing rather than coaching." Bkl.

- From man to man; or Perhaps only . . . with an introduction by S. C. Cronwright-Schreiner. Harper 1927 463p o.p. 1941

"An unfinished novel which the author . . . worked upon at intervals from her eighteenth year (1873) on. Against a colorful background of South Africa she tells the stories of two sisters, Rebekah, miserable in marriage because of her husband's infidelity, and Bertie, still more wretched in the free amours into which she has been driven by man's lack of understanding and women's gossip. Has considerable interest in spite of its out-of-date feminist propaganda." Cleveland

House of darkness. Bobbs. 1931. 319p o.p. 1941

"An exploring party, led by a blond giant from Kansas, and including a great archeologist and his daughter, crash in the jungle while attempting to find the House of Darkness, greatest of the Maya treasure-houses. After almost unbearable hardships they reach their goal, and find the ancient books and treasure guarded by a tribe of Mayas, but are forced to abandon their researches and flee for their lives. A dramatic and plausible yarn." Cleveland

Bread and a sword Scribner 1937 488p
o.p. 1941

"A novel concerned with the efforts of a writer to maintain his artistic integrity and at the same time to support his family during the years of the depression. The author implies that his failure to accomplish either aim is the inevitable consequence in a civilization where the artist is forced to compromise in order to insure subsistence." Bkl.

Breathe upon these slain. Smith, H. 1934
394p o.p. 1941

"The scene . . . is England; and the story has its origin in a rented farmhouse where the narrator is staying. She notices there numerous family photographs, studies them one by one, grows intimate with them through daily contact, and finally—so strongly have they fired her imagination—charts out the lives of the people they represent. The family itself consisted of a mother and father, their four daughters and their one son." N.Y. Times

Tom Cringle's log; illus. by Mead Schaeffer. Dodd 1927 384p illus $2.50

Also obtainable in "Everyman's library" (Dutton 90c)

First appeared in "Blackwood's magazine" in 1829-1833; published in 1834

"A wonderful farrago of thrilling adventure and brilliant pictures of the sea, ostensibly the diary of a midshipman during the great world-struggle of 1813-14. The scene shifts to the West Indies, Jamaica, Bermuda, Cuba, and other places, giving extensive descriptions of the scenery, towns, and inhabitants. Encounters with . . . smugglers and privateers, droll anecdotes, Tom's kidnapping and life aboard the 'Torch' and the 'Wave', make a picturesque and animated narrative." Baker's Best

Abbott. Macmillan 453p illus (Waverley novels. Dryburgh ed) $1.80

Also available in the "Everyman's library" (Dutton 90c)

First published 1820. Sequel to "The monastery"

"Much historical interest attaches to this book on account of its very complete and life-like portrait of Mary Queen of Scots, which, though too favourable and romantic, has, with the accompanying notes, many details not to be found in the ordinary histories. The hero's fortunes are implicated with those of the unfortunate Queen; he witnesses her abdication, attends upon her in Lochleven Castle, assists George Douglas in the attempts to escape, and is present at the fatal battle of Dumbarton. Glimpses are given of many famous personages." Baker's historical

First published 1816 "The north-eastern coast of Scotland in the last decade of the 18th Century. Considered by many lovers of Scott to be one of his finest novels, it gives—to quote the author's own words—an imitation of the shifting manners' of the time, depicting scenes 'the originals of which were daily passing around.' In other words, he was, in this case, not writing historical fiction of his usual kind, but a novel of contemporary life, which for us of a later age has become an instructive presentment of old, far-off days." "Black dwarf" and "A legend of Montrose" are also obtainable in the "Everyman's library" (Dutton 90c)

"Black dwarf" was first published 1816; "A legend of Montrose" in 1819

"The black dwarf" is a minor romance grounded on fact, bringing in a hideous and misanthropic recluse, suggested by a native of Tweeddale, who was only three and a half feet high, the depredations of freebooters on the Border, and the abortive proceedings of the Jacobites about the year 1706 when the Rebellion of 1715 was preparing." y Fortunes of Nigel. Macmillan xxix, 478p illus (Waverley novels. Dryburgh ed) $1.80

Also obtainable in the "Everyman's library" (Dutton 90c)

First published 1822. "Life in London and at the Court in the early days of James I. . . The fortune-hunting Scots who followed James to England come in for humorous portraiture, and the courtiers, fops, servants, park-rangers, and the lawless population of Alsatia or old Whitefriars, the thieves' sanctuary, form a numerous and motley crowd of characters. Nigel is a young Scots nobleman, who, after an adventurous career, marries the daughter of a London watchmaker." Baker's Historical

* Guy Mannering. Macmillan xxiii, 441p illus (Waverley novels. Dryburgh ed) $1.80

Also obtainable in "Everyman's library" (Dutton 90c)

First published 1815. "A favorite example of Scott, though less directly historical than many of his novels. Beginning in mid-eighteenth century, the story ends towards the close of the American Revolution period; it depicts gipsy life, and the smuggling due to the heavy import duties, besides illustrating the defects of eighteenth century prison discipline." Nield

* Heart of Midlothian. Macmillan 576p illus (Waverley novels. Dryburgh ed) $1.80

Also obtainable in the following editions: Scribner (Modern student's lib) $1 Dutton (Everyman's lib) 90c

First published 1818. "Eighteenth century Scotland and England form the background of this novel, and many views of the island are presented as Jeannie Deans trudges from Edinburgh to London to obtain a pardon for her sister Effie, who is falsely charged with the murder of her son. She obtains the pardon, but already Effie has escaped with her lover, and before the sisters are reunited, many adventures befall them. Although the novel contains fewer historical events than most of Scott's, the reader's interest is always held by such living characters as Rattcliffe, the jailer, and Black George, the vagabond leader."  Adrienne Toner. Houghton 1922 316p $2.50

Study of a circle of English patricians into which enters Adrienne Toner, a rich American who dominates most people with whom she comes in contact. She wants to make everybody happy but seems instead to make everyone suffer. When the war comes, Adrienne proves her soul.
 "A very successful piece of character-drawing." Spectator

Dark Hester, Houghton 1929 299p $2.50

"The conflict between the manners and morals of the new and the older generation is delineated with much subtlety in the struggle of a devoted mother to love and accept whole-heartedly the ultra-modern girl her only son has married. To them both his happiness is essential, and with painful mistakes on both sides they gradually win to a mutual respect and understanding." Pittsburgh

* Little French girl. Grosset 508p $1
 First published 1924 by Houghton
 "The contrasting social standards of French and English, in particular their different views about love and marriage, form the background of this story." Book rev. digest

* The old countess. Houghton 1927 373p $2.50

"A story of inter-racial relations, the somberness of which is intensified in Hardy-esque fashion by the setting—the little French village of Buissac crouched beneath overshadowing cliffs in the valley of the great Dordogne. The four characters are, an old French countess, the Goyaesque wreck of a belle of the Second Empire; Richard Graham, a handsome, self-centered young English artist for whom she conceives a belated and sinister passion and two younger women both of whom love him to self-immolation; Jill, Graham's wholesome, beautiful wife, and the saintly, compassionate Marthe Luderac, the old Countess' protégé and guardian." Cleveland

* Philippa. Houghton 1930 545p $2.50

"The adored and adoring father of a keenly intellectual young English girl asks for release from her gentle, self-effacing mother so that he may marry an inferior but beautiful younger woman. With her usual skill in analyzing human emotions Miss Sedgwick follows the girl's life as a rival to her stepmother in her father's affections, the course of events by which the happiness that comes to her brings tragedy to her father, and the more tranquil life of the wise mother." Pittsburgh
 "The story is told with all of Miss Sedgwick's ability to make thrilling the conflict of human will, temperament and motive." Cleveland

Tante. Houghton 1911 437p $2.50

"A study, as usual very diffuse, of the misunderstandings and contradictions of temperament. Tante, a great European pianist, subjugates the soul of a simple and clear-natured girl, who does not see the egoism and cruelty of this dangerous woman till her own life has been almost spoiled." Baker's Best

Revolt of the fishermen; tr from the German by Margaret Goldsmith. Longmans 1930 172p o.p. 1941

"From Germany, where it won the Kleist Prize, comes 'The Revolt of the Fishermen.' The fishermen of a remote village, ground into the mud by the distant corporation that employs them, strike for a larger share of their catch. The soldiers arrive to preserve law and order, the strikers, without plans, without hope, without resources are slowly starved into submission." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Red clay country. Harper 1936 342p o.p. 1941

"Fox hunting and riding in Virginia as enjoyed by an impecunious native daughter, vacationing from New York, is the framework for a light story full of horses and horsemanship, with a slight romance. The old time Negroes and numberless relatives seem stereotyped but the genuine love and knowledge of horses and of the country, with its old customs and makeshifts, will delight many readers." Bkl.

Arizona Jim. Doubleday 1939 279p o.p. 1941

"Several people knew that the desert town of Red Rock and the surrounding range were falling under the control of a daring outlaw whose high-handed violence overrode every attempt to stop his land-grabbing and cattle-rustling. . . But no one was able to stop the rustler's reign of terror until Jim MacDonald, the mild-spoken minister from Arizona came to Red Rock." Hunting

"Michael Dolan was a cowboy but contrary to tradition he preferred to use his fists rather than a gun. Largely thru the efficacy of those fists he won and held not only the huge Arizona ranch left him by an uncle, but also the love of Mary Andress." Book rev. digest

Kingdom in the cactus. Sun dial 272p 50c

First published 1936 by Doubleday
"Captain Luke Hardin, embittered by the horror of war, returned to the United States in 1918; with just one passion in his heart, to revenge himself on Colonel Barkus whom he thought was responsible for his father's death. After searching for one year, he found him living near his (Hardin's) own ranch, the Diamond H. The story tells how he worked out his revenge, and regained his faith in God and man." Hunting

Sunset trail omnibus; containing two complete novels: The ranchman, Square Deal Sanderson. Grosset 2v in 1 $1.29
"Ranchman" was first published 1919 by McClurg; "Square deal Sanderson" first published 1922 by McClurg

In "Ranchman" Squint Taylor, product of the days when the plainsman fought Indians and killed buffalo, meets a smooth Eastern carpetbagger. They fought a good fight and one of them won a thoroughbred—Marion Harlan

"I am Will Bransford," said "Square deal" Sanderson, thus walking into the center of a mad whirlpool which held three of the craftiest scoundrels in the Rockies

"After Joan Parlette, the beautiful young owner of a great cattle empire . . . becomes rich, the man she had foolishly married in haste and her greedy family, all return for a share. How she frees herself from their grasp and finds real romance makes a colorful, realistic and exciting tale." Hunting

Valley of the stars. Century 1926 350p o.p. 1941

"Edna Pendleton inherits her father's half of the Circle Dot ranch and goes West to inspect her property. She finds her co-partner an inscrutable, interesting cowboy. Her arrogance, and a plot which involves him in a murder make the story." Bkl

A man's place; tr. by Oliver La Farge.

Duell 1940 280p $2.50

"In 1910 a young man of little consequence disappears from his native place, a small town in Spain. The effects of this intrinsically unimportant event are far-reaching, one political party is upset, two men are sent to prison for life, several women acquire new husbands or lovers. And then fifteen years later Sabino reappears and the whole town is once more involved in turmoil." Book rev. digest

Mr Witt among the rebels. Houghton 1938 367p $2.50

"Mr Witt, naval consultant to the Spanish Arsenal at Cartagena during the disturbing year, 1873, was a sober, unadventurous Englishman. The only dashing thing he ever did was to marry a beautiful Spaniard, younger than himself, and a Revolutionist. Against a pattern of turmoil and daring events, against the contrasting personalities of his passionate wife and of Colau, hero of the rebels, Mr Witt becomes a figure of subtle mockery. A poignant tale of the Spanish people." Hunting

Pro patria, tr. by James Cleugh from the Spanish novel, Imán. Houghton 1935 795p $2.50

"Filled with patriotism, a young Spanish peasant goes to Morocco to fight the native revolt led by Abd-el-Drim. In a three-day battle he sees his company defeated and annihilated, and he escapes into the desert to wander in torment for seven days. He survives to find his suffering and his patriotism were futile; the end for him was disillusionment and degradation. The revolting details of desert warfare, related with unsparing realism, will prove too harrowing for many." Bkl.

My Theodosia. Houghton 1941 422p $2.50 (W)

"While this story is a fictional interpretation of Theodosia's life, I have tried to be historically accurate in every detail. . . There are nearly as many theories about Theodosia's fate as there are biographies of Aaron, which is saying a great deal. . . I have presented the solution to the mystery which I believe to be accurate. It is based on Aaron's own conviction and is considered the most probable by the present Alston family." Author's note

"Miles Faringdon marries Rome Her-nard believing that he is committing bigamy, since ten years earlier he had been married in South America. He takes the risk of imprisonment and tragedy, against his better judgement, because he realizes it is the only way to give Rome happiness, and because he has a theory that in cases like this blissful ignorance will make for a 'happier Eden.' In spite of the suspicions and intrigues of Rome's very unpleasant family, their marriage is a success and a satisfactory conclusion of all difficulties proves that Miles's theory was right" Book rev. digest

"The puzzlement parents feel over the ways of their modern offspring is freshly and charmingly treated in this story of Caroline Smith, a lovable Englishwoman, and her efforts to guide Leon and Lal, and to interpret them to their father. Of the four gardens marking distinct phases of Caroline's life, the first brings her, as a girl, an idyllic summer romance, the second typifies early married struggles, the third wealth, while the fourth, but six tulips on a roof, finds Caroline alone, and contentedly thinking she has had a good life though 'she herself had done nothing at all. She owed everything to her husband and her children.'" N.Y. libraries

* Sanfelice; a novel. Doubleday 1936 449p
$2.50

"A lengthy, ponderous novel of a little-known historical episode—a revolutionary uprising in Naples in 1799. The state was ruled by Marie Carolina and her ridiculous consort; Emma Hamilton and Lord Nelson were the city's notorious lovers; English, French, and Neapolitans were plotting against each other, and the Republicans were inspired by the Jacobins in France. Luisa Sanfelice, an unhappy wife, drawn into the uprising by her lover, was an ignorant, bewildered sacrifice, whose execution was an act of revenge." Bkl.

"Each year an English clerk and his family went for their two weeks' vacation to a small, second-rate boarding house on the seashore. Very simply the uneventful outing is described with an understanding that is never ironical. There is no climax; it is merely the day-by-day recital of commonplace, anticipated happenings that brought satisfaction to commonplace individuals." Bkl.

* And quiet flows the Don; tr. from the Russian by Stephen Garry. Knopf 1934 755p $3
 "This story of a group of Cossacks, living along the Don river—a primitive, virile, and unbelievably brutal people—centers about Gregor Melekhov, a young Cossack with Turkish blood in his veins. His home life, his unhappy marriage and impassioned love affair, and his military adventures and experiences in the Revolution are told with frank naturalism, from a Bolshevik point of view, and a host of other characters crowd the pages of a powerful but unpleasant novel of war and revolution." Bkl.

M. A. Sholokhov's "The Don flows home to the sea" (Knopf 1941 777p $3.50) (W) is a sequel covering the years following the Russian Revolution

Seeds of tomorrow; tr. from the Russian for the first time by Stephen Garry. Knopf 1935 404p $2

"Picture of a Cossack community on the Don during the Communists' difficult attempt in 1930 to organize a complete collectivization of farming. As the peasants respond variously with enthusiasm, antagonism, duplicity or open hostility to the orders of the mild-mannered, ex-locksmith Davidov, there unfolds before the reader a vivid revelation of the kind of men these Cossacks are, of the characteristics of the land itself, as well as of the problems of Communism. Scenes which are sometimes brutal or coarse intermingled with amusing incidents and all are expressive of character and conditions." N.Y. libraries

 "The spiritual biography of a very rare spirit who was a servant of Charles I. and afterwards acts as go-between to the Anglican and Romanist ecclesiastical parties. Historical events are subordinate, however, to the subjective narrative. . . . Many great men appear, and the manners, the thought, and the religious feeling of the period in England and Italy are rendered with studious accuracy and deep sympathy. Such episodes as the election of a Pope and the plague of Naples are, as it were, careful historical monographs vivified by imagination." Baker's Best

* All men are brothers. . . tr from the Chinese by P. S. Buck. Day 1933 1279p illus $3.50

"The translator says of this famous Chinese novel: 'I think it is one of the most magnificent pageants ever made of any people. Before your eyes upon the pages of this book march the people of China—all the people. . . They are a host living and vivid beyond belief.' The story is long and involved; packed with details of a decadent period in which oppression by officials forced a group of brigands to take refuge in the mountains, and made up chiefly of loosely connected picaresque tales of the activities of these rebels against the social order. It belongs to the thirteenth century but was not written down in its present form until about two hundred years later, when the incidents were familiar to the people through frequent retelling. For the student of Chinese literature and history it is richly rewarding." Bkl.

"Further character study of the Ingestre family of 'Duke Jones' and 'A lady of leisure' Cut short in his career as an actor, young John Ingestre, after ten years of unhappy marriage, is ready for an outbreak. It comes in his love for a young girl possessing all the spontaneity and charm that his wife lacks. In her handling of the forces that restrain him, the author exercises skill and delicacy." Countesse of Pembrokes Arcadia. . .

Macmillan 571p illus (Cambridge English classics) $2.50

"The first edition, containing the first three books, was not published till 1590, though written a decade earlier. . . It is a rambling story of the adventures of two shipwrecked princes, who in disguise woo the daughters of the king of Arcadia, and set in motion a train of events which are to fulfill a certain oracle. The book in both matter and expression is nearer poetry than prose fiction proper, mingling verse with a flowery and emotional prose elaborately cadenced, and imagining a more beautiful world than the real." * "Quo vadis"; a narrative of the time of Nero; tr. from the Polish by Jeremiah Curtin. Little 541p $3

First published 1896

"The book that brought Sienkiewicz recognition throughout the European world. A broad, theatrical picture of Roman life in all its light and shade, splendours and horrors, bringing into salient contrast the licentiousness of paganism and the spiritual beauty of Christianity. Scenes of court life and of Christian worship, the burning of Rome, and the massacres in the amphitheatre, are woven into a rapid narrative, which brings in a motley host of characters, all speaking in their proper voices, slaves, preachers, and imperial Romans. The Apostles Peter and Paul come on the stage, but the pagans are the most interesting characters; Nero, for instance, an impressive figure in his strange and repulsive individuality—and Petronius Arbiter, the artist in refined sensuality, the worshipper of beauty, is the dominating personality of the book." Baker's Best

* With fire and sword; an historical novel of Poland and Russia; tr. from the Polish by Jeremiah Curtin. Little 779p $3

First published 1890

"The first of a trilogy dealing with Poland, Russia, Sweden, and the Ukraine in the period 1647-1674. These remarkable historical novels present a series of vivid pictures illustrating the time when Poland was invaded by Cossacks, Russians, Swedes, Turks, and Tartars. . . . These three romances exhibit the author's wonderful knowledge as regards both history and topography—the local colour being particularly striking throughout. . . .

"The first volume, 'With fire and sword,' has to do with the uprising of the Zaporogian Cossacks whose settlements were on the Dnieper, and whose normal duties, under the sovereignty of Poland, consisted in protecting the frontiers of the Ukraine against the Tartars. The novel begins on the eve of the rising, and ends with the defence of Zbaraz

"The second volume, 'Deluge,' deals with the invasion of Poland as a whole by the Swedes, arising out of the claims of Charles Augustus, the Swedish king, to the Crown of Poland. The earlier part of the novel shows the utter collapse of the Poles, while the later chapters describe how they ultimately repulsed and drove out the invading Swedes after tremendous fighting.

"Lastly, the third volume, 'Pan Michael,' after beginning with quieter scenes (domestic life in Warsaw)—passes to the Polish outposts in the steppes, and, towards the end, tells of the Tartar invasion of 1672-73, and of John Sobieski's great victory over the Turks and Tartars at Chocim." Nield

Maid Silja; the history of the last offshoot of an old family tree; tr. from the Finnish by Alexander Matson. Macmillan 1933 313p $2.50

Published in England under title: Fallen asleep while young

"On a June morning Silja, a beautiful young country girl, maidservant on a farm in Finland, dies of consumption. Her death is the end of a long chain of events beginning thirty years back, when her father inherited the prosperous Salmelus farm. In Kustaa's incapable hands, the once well-kept farm runs down and is finally lost. After her father's death Silja hires out as a milkmaid on various farms. Her sad story is told in this novel, a popular one in Finland." Book rev. digest

* Bread and wine; tr. from the Italian by Gwenda David and Eric Mosbacher. Harper 1937 319p $2.50

"The peasants in Italy under the Fascist dictatorship are shown to be crushed by fear, poverty, ignorance, and superstition. Pietro Spina, a young Socialist, secretly returns after fifteen years of exile to work for the liberty of his people. Disguised as a monk, he wanders over the countryside, but is forced to flee when the police discover his whereabouts. Social and philosophical in tone, this solid novel is vividly real and important as an uncensored picture of modern Italy." Bkl.

* Fontamara; tr by Michael Wharf. Modern age 299p pa 35c

First published 1934 by Smith & Haas
"A bitter, realistic novel of the working of Fascism in a village of southern Italy. It is related by several of the peasants, who, when they demanded redress for the systematic robbing by landlords and officials, had seen their village neighbors raped, massacred, or imprisoned. Coarse humor, ribaldry, and tragedy mingle, and throughout the shrewdness of the ignorant farmers contrasts with the cunning of their city exploiters. Not pleasant reading." Bkl.

In this "double-header, Inspector Maigret steps out of his own country to go sleuthing. The first novel, 'A Crime in Holland,' finds him crashing into the rigid decorum of small-town Dutch society. In the second, 'At the Gai-Moulin,' his mystery solving involves a dancer called Adele; a corpse found in a wicker basket; and a spy ring. Both stories stress his talent for atmosphere and oddities of character, over and above the skillful puzzling." Hunting

First published 1835. This edition follows that of 1853 "in which Simms corrected some small errors, altered the paragraphing and made extensive additions to his famous preface." Preface

"From the inevitable comparison with Cooper, Simms emerges without apology. The chieftain of the Indians, Sanutee, who foresees the destruction of his race before the ruthless progress of the English settlers, is a notable figure. Betrayed by some of his chiefs, among them his own son Oconestoga, who have agreed to sell their lands to the English, he drives them into exile but dies in the battle between the English and the Yemassee." Co-op, a novel of living together. Farrar 1936 426p o.p. 1941

"In fiction form the author has told the story of the self-help co-ops of California. It is carried on to 1936 and ends with a plea to the President to put the co-ops on a self-sustaining basis. The jungle The author 1906 309p o.p. 1941

"In this book the author has vividly portrayed life in the Chicago stockyards and his revelations are so shocking and revolting that one cannot read them without being filled with horror... The central figure in the story is Jurgis Rudkus, a poor Slav immigrant, who comes to the new world to make his fortune. He is accompanied on his venture by his father, Ona Lukoszaite the girl to whom he is engaged, and her family... Their experiences are harrowing in the extreme; they are cheated, abused, and oppressed on every hand, suffer privations of every kind and find death a blessed release when it finally ends their sufferings... Throughout the story the dominating influence of the trades' unions is strikingly illustrated and the futility of a workingman's struggle against them." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

King Coal; introduction by Georg Brandes. Macmillan 1917 396p o.p. 1941

"Mr Sinclair again appears in the role of investigator, here fictionally represented as a college student who spends a vacation making a survey of conditions in the Colorado mines. What the hero finds and a terrible mine disaster lead him to the conclusion that the only protection for mine-labor is through its organization, he himself becoming an ardent Unionist. An exciting but unduly sensational story, the well-substantiated data being made the basis for a plea for the enforcement of laws for the protection of miners' lives." Cleveland

"Deals with the rise and decay of the textile city of Lodz, Poland, and with the fortunes of the Polish-Jewish brothers, Max and Jacob Ashkenazi, whose personalities gradually come to dominate the life of the town. . . . What gives the book its significance is not the picture of nineteenth-century Jewish family life, and not the characterizations of the two brothers, but the clear exposition of the class struggle of which Max and Jacob form unconscious parts. . . . It is Lodz that is the real hero of the book, Lodz conceived not merely as a Polish-Jewish-German industrial town, but as the type of world-city whose growth is forced by an advancing capitalism and whose downfall is due to a retreating one." "The tragic, human story of the workers who drove a tunnel through the base of Gauley mountain in West Virginia. It brings to life the records of a senate investigating committee, made after most of the workers died from silicosis, since no precautions were taken to guard the men against the silica in the rock. . . . Other injustices of the company, however, will arouse the reader's sympathy and anger equally. Mr Skidmore chooses several families and individuals as his subjects; their story is the whole thing, it is naturally told with little sensationalism and no direct denunciations." Bkl.

Doubleday 1940 307p front $2 (W)

Sequel to "River rising." York Allen is back in the Blue Ridge district again, a full-fledged doctor. Unscrupulous timber agents have prejudiced the hill people against new methods and young Doctor Allen has a battle on his hands

I will lift up mine eyes. Doubleday 1936 305p o.p. 1941

"Maw Cutlip loved her hard-working life on a small isolated farm in the Blue Ridge mountains, but she was ambitious for her children. A drought that ruined the crops drove her husband to work in a lumber mill down in the hollow, and gave the children a chance for schooling, but to her dismay Maw found that steady wages and easier work had weaned her husband and son from the farm. When an accident makes her a widow she turns unhesitatingly, with the younger children, back to the hills." Bkl.

Triumph of Willie Pond. Vanguard 1940 370p $2.50

"Novelization of an American family on relief. It is the story of Willie Pond, his wife Sarah, and their numerous children—decent, self-respecting Americans until the depression hit them. First Willie lost his good job; then he struggled to make a living at any kind of work, including a WPA job. Stricken with tuberculosis Willie is sent to a sanatorium while the family settles down to despair and welfare organizations. Just as they have found help from an understanding welfare worker, and have pulled themselves out of their morass, Willie is pronounced out of danger. When he finds that his recovery means the end of Sarah's 'pension' and all security, Willie sees only one way out of the problem and he takes it." Book rev. digest

"A good old-fashioned pirate story, a tale of tall ships and lawless men on the Spanish Main back in the days when New York owed allegiance to King George. But it has an additional interest, for it includes many of the characters made famous by Robert Louis Stevenson in 'Treasure Island.' The action takes place a few years previous to Stevenson's classic thriller, and tells, in fact, how Captain Flint and Murray sacked the Spanish gold galleon and buried their stolen treasure on the Dead Man's Chest and on Treasure Island." "In the early 1900's Margaret Dall met and fell in love with a young Japanese engineer working in America. They married and the theme of this novel concerns the difficulties rising from such a marriage—each a foreigner in the other's native land with a secret consciousness of shame. These feelings are passed on to their daughter, who longs to be American and finally wins their consent to an American marriage." Book rev. digest "Driven by starvation a Japanese family sold their young daughter to a house of prostitution. There, until a Christian philanthropist purchased her freedom, she was the property of a wealthy business man. Later she fell in love with his son, who, imbued with the traditional filial submission, realized the futility of their love, and together they committed suicide. The style is undistinguished, but the story shows an intimate familiarity with Japan-

First published 1896

"Tom Grogan was a stevedore, who died from the effects of an injury. With a family to support, his widow conceals the fact of her husband's death . . . that she may assume both his name and business . . . A sturdy, cheery, capable Irishwoman, she carries on the business with an increasing success, which arouses the jealous opposition of some rival stevedores and walking delegates of the labor union she has refused to join." "Bernie, who accepts his work in the Holt automobile plant uncritically, asking nothing better of life than to become a 'straw boss,' tells in his own vernacular the story of his friend Russ, a former lumberjack, whose restlessness and longing for independence make it impossible for him to adjust himself to the stultifying regimentation of the factory's assembly line. A compact, dramatic novel which is also an indictment of the modern industrial system." N.Y. libraries

"The travels and observations of a Welsh family, a group of delightful oddities, through England, Scotland, and Wales: Matt. Bramble is a reflection of Smollett himself, his sister Tabitha is a second Aunt Grizzle. . . The sarcastic descriptions of towns and peoples are doubly comic from being in letters written by the different characters, with absurdly incompatible points of view. Parodies the language and manners of the Methodists. The Scottish portion is particularly familiar and racy, dealing with the scenes of Smollett's younger days." Baker's Best
- Peregrine Pickle Dutton 2v (Everyman's lib) ea 90c
First published 1751
"Peregrine's schooling, his courtships (with most unsavoury interludes) his travels and amorous exploits on the Continent and in London, make a humorous but unedifying story. The realism is Hogarthian; the caricature, it has been said—but this is only a superficial impression—gives us comic beasts rather than men" Baker's Best
- * Roderick Random Dutton xx, 428p (Everyman's lib) 90c
First published 1748
"The career of an apprentice who goes out into the world to seek his fortune. He meets with many adventures, becoming in time a surgeon's assistant on a man-of-war. Here the story becomes autobiographical. The author's experiences as a surgeon in the attack on Carthage are described, with satirical comments on the mismanagement of the expedition. Later, the hero enters the French army and fights at Dettingen. He returns to England, marries his sweetheart, finds his father whom he had supposed dead, and ends his life in prosperity. Various types of mariners are delineated in semi-caricature." Miller

The history of the founding and the European backgrounds of the founders of the New Harmony community in Indiana. Robert Owen is the central figure, but the personalities of Pestalozzi, William MacLure, and Owen's son Robert Dale Owen, are presented in the light of their influence on this dream of an ideal society.

"This movingly beautiful story of Margaret Stevenson, Massachusetts bond servant in the 1650's and a Quaker convert, is based with some adaptations on the life of Mary Dyer. The brief and happy days of Margaret's tutelage under the brilliant John Cotton are followed at his death by renewed harshness from her employers and by Boston's persecution of the Quakers. Only the powerful pleading of a lover reprieves Margaret from the gallows. An ample background for the poignant tale is set by the author in her detailed portrayal of the seething and tense excitement over religious belief in Massachusetts in this period." N.Y. libraries

Southwold, Stephen, 1887-

- Bredon and sons, (by) Neil Bell (pseud.). Little 1934 587p o.p 1941
 "In its pattern this novel is like 'Inheritance,' a story of four generations in an English family, this time shipbuilders on the Suffolk coast. In addition to the human interest, there is, in the earlier chapters particularly, the stirring drama of the constant struggle with the sea, but as a story, it is uneven and comes to an ineffectual conclusion." Wis bul.

So perish the roses by Neil Bell (pseud.). Macmillan 1940 512p $2.50

"Charles Lamb, the lovable and pathetic genius, is the hero of a novel that portrays his childhood, his eccentric family, his school days, his first encounters with the world of letters and business, and the woman he loved so futilely." Ontario library review

Strange melody; a novel (by) Neil Bell (pseud.). Doubleday 1936 370p $3

"The history of John MacDermott, his struggles and defeats, and his eventual success as a phenomenally popular author. He is a swaggering, exuberant figure at all stages of his career, and an appealing character, but his history, which is told in the first person by his daughter, has little plot and its rambling digressions are often monotonous. For readers interested in the English literary scene." Bkl.

Souvestre, Émile, 1806-1854

Attic philosopher in Paris; or, A peep at the world from a garret Being the journal of a happy man; from the French Appleton 194p o.p 1941

"Appeared in 1850. He shows us one year in the life of a poor workingman who, watching brilliant Paris from his garret window, knows moments of envy, ambition, and loneliness. For these moods he finds a cure in kindness to others, in a recognition of his own limitations, and in a resolve to make the best of things." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

Published in England under title: The angel in the mist

"The long central portion of this book is a letter written by a once celebrated actress to a friendly dramatic critic, explaining to him thru the story of her life the reasons for her retirement. The prolog and epilog, supposedly written in 1966, reveal the feelings of two men, the critic and his friend, for the heroine." Book rev. digest

Road to Needles. Houghton 1937 300p $2

"Needles is a small town on the Arizona side of the California boundary, where the trains stop for water on trips from West to East. Its significance here is due to the fact that Needles is the first stop for disappointed souls returning to the East from Hollywood. The story is of a prim little New Englander who came to Hollywood to write for the movies, married a drunken ex-playwright, and learned to face reality before she took the road to Needles." Flambeau Jim. Scribner 1927 334p o.p. 1941

"In this story of manly men, Jim the 'deaf' fiddler, traces the paycar murder gang, but in so doing loses his heart to brave little Pickie, supposedly the daughter of one of the gang. The story is enlivened, not only by fights with the hunchback and other members of the gang, but by battle with the elements in the building of the Flambeau dam." Wis. bul.

* Laramie holds the range; illus. by James Reynolds. Scribner 1921 374p illus o.p. 1941

"A good western story with lots of action and go, concerned with the clash between cattlemen of the Falling Wall range and a gang of rustlers to which the hero is supposed to belong." Cleveland

Spanish lover. Scribner 1930 438p $2

"A stirring romance of Spain in the days of Phillip II. The hero is the dashing Don John of Austria, natural son of Emperor Charles V a born sea-soldier and a generous and charming personality. The story chronicles his early days as a mysterious unknown, his first taste of court life, his two loves, and his great victory, as Admiral of the combined fleets of Venice and Spain, over the Turks at the naval battle of Lepanto (1571)." Gallows' orchard. Cape 1930 285p o.p. 1941

"Because Effie Gallows, courageous and proud was of finer clay than the self-righteous Scotch villagers, they punished cruelly her violation of the moral code. Effie herself realized that her real crime lay in marrying a man, without love, to give her child a name. Her tragic story is effectively and movingly told by the schoolmaster, one of the three men who loved and pitied her." Bkl.

realization of that dream. Nathan, determined to start an American firm similar to the British East India Company, brought his bride, Joan to Maceo, the Portuguese-held Chinese town and the only place in China where foreigners might live. The development of their characters as the trade developed makes the story." Library journal

The lady who came to stay Knopf 1931 284p op 1941

"A cruel, violent old woman conceives an unreasoning antipathy for her dying sister-in-law and seeks to harm her child. When death claims the two women, their spirits return to the gloomy old place and wage a ceaseless combat, the one to do evil, the other to thwart her. The whole household is aware of these visitants and indeed so concrete is the evidence that this ghost story becomes most persuasively convincing." N.Y. libraries

Castle in Andalusia. Macmillan 1935 381p op 1941

"On the eve of the Spanish revolution Catharine Marston was married to Don Ramón de Gutierrez and left her English home in Hampshire to live in her husband's gloomy castle in Andalusia. Don Ramón was a different man in Spain from the romantic gentleman who had wooed her in England and Catharine had to grow accustomed to his inconsiderate treatment of her. But she learned to love Spain and the Spanish people thru her friendship with Pedro, a young peasant who held a position of trust on the estate, and it was Pedro who stood by her in the crisis of her life." "An extraordinary book, outdoing Wells. A history of the world of the future for billions of years. Presentday mankind is destroyed by a catastrophe. A new type is evolved and similarly destroyed. This happens 17 times. The earth changes radically, is invaded by Mars and finally rendered uninhabitable by the disintegration of the moon. Foreseeing this, the men of the day have evolved successors who can live on Venus. Millions of years later a like transfer is made to Neptune. At the end of the whole solar system is about to end and the Eighteenth Men are raining human dust on the universe, hoping that some spores may find a star in some other galaxy suitable for human life and thus carry this tale on."  I will eat no flesh while the world

 Anne India, almost pagan in her worship of strength and beauty, transforms her into a fear-ridden Puritan who must at any cost protect her young from touching, tasting or seeing anything which would offer temptation to his abnormal senses. The change which this fierce protective instinct brings about in the heretofore sane and healthy family life ruins her husband's happiness, and warps, all but irreparably, the lives of her elder normal son and adopted daughter. The story is a strong indictment of the doctrine that the world should be made safe for the weak at the expense of the strong." Book rev. digest

"The setting for this novel is Granada, in all its beauty, squalor, and mysticism. Don José, retired bull fighter, hopes that Pepe will carry on the matador tradition. To obtain a fortune which is essential to success in the bull ring, Pepe is betrothed to the beautiful Pilar who has charm as well as reputed wealth. But neither the lustful Pepe nor the lewd and shrewd Don José marries Pilar. She loves another. An intimate life of the country is presented in vivid detail. Some brutal episodes" Bkl.

"Driven through no fault of their own from the dusty farm in Oklahoma which their family had owned for years, the Joads, numbering 13, started for California to find work, lured there by the glowing handbills of fruit growers who would benefit by cheap labor. An ancient car made into a truck carried them and all they had, and they were a little dismayed to find on the great highway hundreds of other families going the same way. Grandma died first—he had not wanted to leave

Oklahoma—and then Grandma, but the family trek had to go on; they must find jobs. They found only disillusion, exploitation, and hunger. The close family ties, the tenderness, understanding, and courage of the simple people, life on the highway and in the miserable workers' camps in California, are told in a rich narrative that moves the reader profoundly. The natural language is bald and will offend many, but a serious economic evil is here realistically presented" Bkl

"George and Lennie are two drifting ranch hands who dream, as rootless men do, of a piece of land of their own, where they will 'belong.' They have never been able to work up a stake because big, blundering, simple-witted Lennie keeps getting them into trouble. He can never remember things. . . Fabulously strong but very timid, he is quite docile in the hands of George, the pilot-fish of the pair. George feels that Lennie has been given into his keeping. He controls him by talking about the rabbit farm they will have one day, where Lennie may look after the rabbits if he is good—for George too is webbed in the dream. They come to work in the Salinas Valley and it is there, among the people they meet at the ranch, that their story is worked out." New Republic

Pastures of heaven. Brewer 1932 294p o p 1941

"A secluded mountain valley in California, named by early settlers Pastures of Heaven, provides the setting for these sketches and links the fortunes of a dozen families through a common environment. Sensitivity, a very human pity, and humor preserve the book from an unwholesome impression that the themes of horror and abnormality might have conveyed in less skilful writing." Bkl.

First published 1935 by Covici

"Tortilla Flat was a tumble-down section of Monterey, California. The paisanos who lived there were a mixed race of Spanish, Indian, Mexican and Caucasian bloods. The central character is one of the paisanos, Danny, who came back from the first World war to discover that he had inherited two houses in Tortilla Flat. There he gathered his friends around him and they lived their carefree, unmoral lives with gay abandon until their beloved Danny died." Book rev. digest

 First published in Finland, 1870
 "There is a folk tale quality about this story of seven lusty brothers translated from the Finnish. Inheriting a great farm, the brothers choose to live in the forest, pitting their strength and skill against nature. Their struggles to learn to read, their acquiescence in law and order, their final return to the farmstead and their acceptance of domesticity, are all narrated with force and humor." Wis bul.

"A novelized version of the career of Van Gogh, the mad genius. With apparent fidelity to the sources, but with imagined dialog, the author follows his whole tortured life, that ended at thirty-seven in suicide—his early apprenticeship as an art dealer, his agonizing years as a religious worker among the coal miners, his love for half a dozen women, some of them prostitutes, and his long, frenzied striving for a technique of painting. Almost too painful in parts, but probably true in essentials." Bkl

First published 1937 by Farrar

"Spurred by dissatisfaction with life in Merkmunville, Ohio, Jesse Ellison, in 1837, uprooted his family and sought a home site beyond the Mississippi. The story of their westward trek and settlement in Iowa parallels the portrayal of the regenerative effect of Ellison's decision upon his wife, his three sons and one daughter, and upon himself. The characterization is good and the narrative, with its background rooted in American history and family tradition, is vigorous, elemental, and humorous by turn." Bkl.

The rebellion of Lennie Barlow. Farrar 1937 278p o.p. 1941

"When Lennie, a southern farm boy, saturated with Confederate traditions, moved to a small Iowa town with his father and mother he was practically ostracized in school for maintaining his own version of the war between the states. How his courage and native humor finally brought about not only an improvement in school methods but an opportunity for his family is told in a fast-moving, pleasant narrative with a slight love interest. Teachers, superintendent, a doctor, and several townspeople belong to the story but the honors go to Lennie and his secret club of allies, the G. O. A. T's" Bkl

This year Abel's cherished hog, Blue Boy, is judged the champion; Mrs Frake's pickles win first prize; and Wayne and Margery learn a good deal about life and love. Delightfully written, with humor and understanding. The two sexual adventures of the son and daughter will offend some readers. Others will consider two such episodes unconvincing in this type of story." Bkl.

Stranger's return. Harcourt 1933 252p o.p. 1941

"The background is a prosperous Iowa farm and the central figure is Grandpa Storr, eighty-six, still strong and zestful and still undisputed ruler over his household of retainers. The story is concerned with the return of Grandpa Storr's granddaughter Louisa, a modern New Yorker, to the home of her fathers, the instant sense of kinship and understanding which the two felt for each other, and the effect of Louisa's visit on the lives of the Storrs and their neighbors." "A story of English village and farm life from the 1880's to the first World war. The hero, James Horton, promises his old but indomitable grandmother that he will leave the tradesman's way of life and become a farmer as soon as he is able to do so. He spends a few years as a grocer's apprentice, then sets up his own shop, is successful there, and at last, realizing his lifelong ambition, becomes a farmer owning six hundred acres of land." Bright metal. Doubleday 1928 453p o.p. 1941

"The scene is a small town in the Tennessee hill-country. To this remote corner of the world, comes as a bride, Agatha Pomeroy, an educated, refined, sensitive California girl. Instead of the romantic south she had imagined, with magnolia-shaded lawns and an air of aristocratic gentility, she finds here an overpowering blend of meanness, ignorance, and political corruption. She attempts to bring about political reform, and failing in this seeks happiness in an illicit love affair. Finally after much strife she grows to love her husband so, that she is content to live as placidly as the native women." Bkl.

Brothers, a novel. Knopf 1932 261p $2

"The brothers, Peter and Fergus Macrae, were two Western Highland fishermen. Peter, the elder and leader, was clever but a physical and moral coward, Fergus, a giant physically, was kindly but slow-witted, and easily led by Peter. The story, told in rather detached episodes, follows the lives of the brothers from youth to old age, contrasting the two characters and tracing the havoc wrought in their lives by the orphan girl Mary, who was adopted by their father." Try the sky; with a foreword by Compton Mackenzie Macmillan 1933 287p $2.50

"The love story of Carlotta, an Austrian girl, and José, a young Irishman, provides the foundation for the symbolism and mysticism which are characteristic of this novelist. The lovers are oppressed by the feeling that their romantic, spiritual love is doomed to extinction by the forces of nature, represented here by a Canadian Indian princess, and the story concerns their struggle for and achievement of spiritual peace and security. While the symbolism is of primary importance, the action is sufficiently dramatic to create an interest in the characters as individuals." Bkl

* Song of songs (Das hohe lied); tr. by Thomas Seltzer. Huebsch 1909 640p o.p. 1941

"The detailed story of the progressive degeneration of a weak and unfortunate woman [the victim of a degraded portion of Berlin society]. . . It is highly regarded by many critics . . . but some readers may consider it unwholesome." A. D. Dickinson's Best books of our time

Wife of Steffen Tromholt; tr. by Eden & Cedar Paul Liveright 1929 2v o.p. 1941

"Here Sudermann portrays the conflict between an artist's need for unlimited freedom and his craving for spiritual companionship and the safe anchorage of a home. The book is, in effect, the study of a wise and understanding wife who for thirty-three years so supports and inspires her husband that at her death he desires only to end his life alone." Bkl.

Sue, Eugène, 1804-1857

Mysteries of Paris. Century 6v in 3 illus o.p. 1941

First published in English in 1845
"A startling and incredible melodrama, professing to be a realistic picture of the Parisian underworld, the slaves of poverty and vice, swindlers, robbers, murderers. The central figure is a wealthy German prince who has ordained himself as a grand justiciar of society, to succour the unfortunate, remedy iniquities, and avenge guilt." Baker's Best

Wandering Jew. Modern lib. 2v in 1 $1.45

"A romance on the semi-supernatural theme of tradition, compounded of the same realistic and sensational ingredients, powerful in its command of terror; no doubt, inspired by Maturin—whence, probably, the animus against Jesuits." Baker's Best

Daughter of the narikin. Doubleday 1932 325p $2.50

"Yukiko, the heroine of this novel of modern Japan was a gentle shy girl, unfitted for the social life which her aristocratic step-mother mapped out for her. Her father, a self-made man, called in Japan a narikin, was kindly, but completely dominated by his second wife. Instead of marrying Masao, whom she really liked, Yukiko was wedded to an aristocratic rake, because of the insistence of her step-mother. Yukiko's life after her father's death was so unhappy that she became a priestess in a Buddhist temple. The scene of the latter portion of the book describing the further adventures of Masao, is the Japanese colony in New York City." Book rev. digest

Daughter of the nohfu; illus. by Tekisui Ishii. Doubleday 1935 340p illus o.p. 1941

"A story of present day village life in Japan. Particularly it is the story of the family of the farmer Koemon San. Koemon San loves the old ways of living, while his children are drawn to new ways, and the story relates how each side makes its compromises." Book rev digest

 "Here is a book about the under-dogs of British agriculture—the ploughman, the laboring-man who works on the land for wages. . . We follow the fortunes of Ted Noble, son of Tom the Ploughman, from his school-boy days (the only ones in which he had any enjoyment of life) through his adolescence and youth as a young ploughman . . . on into his young manhood, even more grimly starved than his youth; and in the last chapter leave him, uprooted, half dead with hunger, a beggar on the London streets, singing for pennies. A melancholy book, an honest one and honestly and capably written"

 First rebel; being a lost chapter of our history and a true narrative of America's first uprising against English military authority . . . together with a biography of Colonel James Smith; recounted from contemporary documents. Farrar 1937 393p illus o.p. 1941
 "The tale is of the unruly Scotch Irish who, flooding into Pennsylvania in the early eighteenth century, began to assert themselves politically at the time of King George's War, and a few years later became a grievous worry to the ruling classes of the Province. In particular, he deals with their turbulent course in the years 1763-67. . . The hero of the book

Forbidden ground. Farrar 1938 445p
op. 1941

"Adventure against an authentic background. Detroit and the fur trade country of Northern Minnesota at the time of the Revolution, based on the fact that a British garrison built a fort in Minnesota to prevent George Rogers Clark from cutting the famous Grand Portage fur caravan trail and seizing the rich fur exports. Fast-moving and romantic, with a French-Scotch hero unable to decide which of two girls he wants."

* Judas tree. Putnam 1933 360p $2.50

y "The long, agonizing siege of Pittsburgh by Indian tribes during the Pontiac conspiracy of 1763 is the event about which this romance centers. It is stirring adventure, with authentic historical background, a hero of incredible endurance and courage, and a heroine whose attractiveness is enhanced by the mystery surrounding her name and past." Phantom emperor. Putnam 1934 391p
op. 1941

"Historical romance built about a strange episode in American frontier history, the attempt of a white man who proclaimed himself Montezuma II, to conquer a kingdom for himself in the Southwest. The 'phantom emperor' mustered an army at Buffalo in 1838, sailed westward thru the Great Lakes to the present site of Duluth, struck out thru the wilderness of northern Minnesota and reached Winnipeg, where the bold scheme collapsed." "In the account of his four wonder-countries Swift satirizes contemporary manners and morals, art and politics—in fact the whole social scheme—from four different points of view. The huge Brobdingnagians reduce man to his natural insignificance, the little people of Lilliput parody Europe and its petty broils, in Laputa philosophers are ridiculed, and finally all Swift's hatred and contempt find their satisfaction in degrading humanity to a bestial condition." Brood of ducklings. Doubleday 1928 324p o.p. 1941

"A leisurely novel of English life concerned with the relations of a middle-aged gentleman of the old school, cultivated, sensitive, shy and fastidious, and his two motherless daughters, Catherine, domestic and apparently passionless, and Rhoda, vivacious, impulsive and the apple of her father's eye. The tragi-comedy of the story is the father's frantic emotions as his 'ducklings' try the water for the first time." Cleveland

Elder sister. Doran 1925 343p o.p. 1941

"A triangle of drab lives in which two sisters, stenographers in London offices, Anne, dependable and 'having that rare and incalculable power to love others better than herself and yet keep her personality inviolable,' and Vera, childlike and passionate, both love Mortimer, a bank-clerk, handsome, self centered and unstable. Restrained, subtle and sympathetic but has not quite the unity and economy of material of 'Nocturne.'" Cleveland

Elizabeth; a story in six parts. Doubleday 1934 400p o.p. 1941

"Two Elizabeths appear in this book—Beth, favored of fortune, lovely and gracious, and Eliza, poor and drearily housed. It is Eliza who is the more interesting and alive; she is jealous of Beth, sharp, clever, disagreeable. The story is long, leisurely, with many characters, and is set in the English town of Southampton at the time of a real estate boom." Bkl.

Georgian house, a tale in four parts. Doubleday 1932 341p o.p. 1941

"The background of this story of dramatic plot and action is a fine old Georgian house overlooking the main street of a Sussex town. The plot is concerned with the heir to the house. The designing young housekeeper whom he inherits along with the house and who traps him into marriage, an unscrupulous lawyer, a lost will, and a double murder which clears the way for a happy ending." Book rev. digest

Harvest comedy. Doubleday 1938 561p o.p. 1941

"The story of the interwoven destinies of three men, born in the same English town, following their business careers in London, and retiring to Brighton after middle-age. One is a trickster whose schemes involve the others and almost ruin them; one is a good man with no great ability, and one is an ignorant blunderer. The relationship of the three is complicated, many characters appear, and the novel is long, diffuse, and old-fashioned." Bkl.

* Nocturne. Doran 1917 250p o.p. 1941

"An exceptionally authentic rendering of Cockney psychology and manners lifted by the sheer art of the author out of dinginess and pettiness on to the plane of beauty. The characters are Pa, his two very dissimilar daughters, and their 'blokes'; the action takes place in a single night." Cleveland

September Doran 1919 304p o.p. 1941

Subtle "Analysis of the character and reactions of a lovely woman, thirty-eight years old, long since disillusioned about her marriage, when she finds herself in love with a younger man. She is contrasted with a young girl who loves the same man. The setting is an English house and London just before the war." Bkl.

Sketch of a sinner Doubleday 1929 319p o.p. 1941

"In this novel Swinerton has portrayed a sensitive middle-class English girl whose marriage to an elderly antique dealer could not satisfy her longings for the love and companionship of younger men. Lydia makes a gallant, if unconventional, attempt to wrest happiness from a grudging fate, but tragedy ends her efforts. Parts of the book, especially those describing Lydia, are beautifully done, but the story is unconvincing." Bkl.

Two wives; a tale in four parts. Doubleday 1940 367p $2.50 (W)

The troubled year in the life of a popular English stage comedian, during which his first wife commits suicide, his brother commits a murder, his second wife is unfaithful to him, and he marries a third time

Young Felix. Doran 1923 439p o.p. 1941

"A 'chronicle of failure' which nevertheless manages to convey a note of triumph and even romance. The story of the struggles of a lower middle-class English family against misfortunes of all kinds—poverty, unemployment, illness, even starvation. Felix, youngest of the Hunters, experiences many failures in the course of the first 30 years of his life here presented, but he manages to develop into a fine artist, and at the end is freed from a mistaken marriage and presumably is about to enter upon a happier union."  Second hoeing. Putnam 1935 309p o p 1941

"The Schreissmillers were German-Russians, who settled in Colorado, and engaged in sugar beet farming, first, as contract workers and later as renters. The story tells of the daughter Hannah's life, which was conditioned by her father's unfeeling drive and cruel ignorance, just as his endeavors seemed to be controlled by the relentless forces of nature. A good presentation of immigrant life among beet growers, with real characterization of the individuals." Bkl

People of the plains; tr. from the Hungarian by George Halasz. Little 1932 287p o.p. 1941

"This first novel by a Hungarian peasant is largely autobiographical. The central character is Bertalan, a young farmer who, becoming the head of the family at his father's death, makes the postmaster's wife his mistress and is disillusioned by her faithlessness. The war of 1914-1918 tears him from his next sweetheart and his experiences with the other bewildered peasants in the trenches are described with grim realism. The story lacks plan and cohesion and will appeal only to readers with a taste for novels of the soil." Bkl

Star to steer by; a novel. Macrae Smith co. 1938 285p o.p. 1941

"A Wisconsin mill town is torn by a strike when a labor organizer incites the workmen against the paternalistic mill-owners. The story is told as it affected Linda, an owner's wife. Free from any theories, she saw the sad results of the strife on human lives and she knew that both her husband and the strike leader fought for principles in which they believed. The book is light fiction, a family novel rather than an industrial novel, and in spite of its superficiality it is sincere and appealing." Bkl

"Alice Adams is a 'small town' girl of the Middle West. She has charm and ambition, but handicapped as she is by lack of money, background and ideals, her imagination can compass no higher career than struggling to keep up with her childhood friends whose fortunes have grown with the town. Alice is a pathetic figure, at once amusing, appealing and irritating, as are her self-sacrificing but one-ideaed mother and her simple-minded, goaded father. A highly handled albeit penetrating study." Cleveland

Try as his parents may, to deal with him firmly, little Orvie is eventually the victory in many a family combat. First published 1924 by Doran

"Treve, the golden-tawny collie of the Dos Hermanos sheep ranch, is the hero of these episodes wherein figure straying sheep and a would-be dog thief, rustlers and a sheep-killing wolf. Always Treve does his duty and with uncanny collie skill protects the interests of his two gods, young Mack and grouchy old Fenno. The latter, at first detesting the sight and sound of Treve, gradually succumbs to his lovable traits and finally acknowledges his fondness openly. In an afterword the author devotes some space to the real Treve, a very strange and beautiful collie, who was the author's chum at Sunnybank." Book rev. digest

The first story is the "best of Thackeray's shorter novels, originally written as a serial for Fraser's Magazine, was published in book form in 1844. It is cast in the form of an autobiography. The hero is an Irish gambler and fortune-hunter, a braggart and a blackleg, but of audacious courage and of picturesque versatility. He tells his story in a plain matter-of-fact way, without concealment of sophistication, glorying in episodes which would seem shameful to the most rudimentary conscience." H. R. "It not only presents a most lifelike and convincing picture of English society in the first half of the century, but it excels in the drawing of individual types. Colonel Newcome, perhaps the most perfect type of a gentleman to be found in the whole range of fiction, sheds undying lustre upon the novel. Ethel Newcome is one of the rare women of fiction who really live as much in the reader's consciousness as in the conception of the author. . . As a novel of English upper and middle class life, it remains without a rival." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

"One of the few great novels of the world, and perhaps the only novel of society that ranks as a classic. . . The central figure of the book is . . . the immortal, inimitable, magnificent Becky Sharp . . . who never falters in the bluff game she is playing with society. Her victims are numerous, her success, with slight exceptions, is unimpeachable. . . The environment in which she is placed—fashionable England of the beginning of the century—offered a great field for the genius of Thackeray. He portrayed it with marvelous, sustained skill through the long, leisurely, manu-captured novel. . . His satire plays like searching light upon the canvas." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

Katrin becomes a soldier; tr. from the German by Margaret Goldsmith. Little 1931 321p o.p. 1941

Published in England under title: Catherine joins us

"In this diary a young Jewish girl records her life during five years, beginning in 1916. The first years are those of a precocious, sensitive adolescent, experiencing her first romance, then the war breaks, Lucien goes to the front, and Katrin to a Red Cross station in Metz. She immerses herself in the ghastly horror of relief work, hopefully at first, then in growing desperation and hopelessness after Lucien's death. The book complements 'All quiet on the western front' by its picture of a woman's part behind the lines and the theme of both is the waste, not only of life, but of youth." Bkl.

"The three sons of the Young family had married and gone to homes of their own, but the depression and the drought drove them back, with their wives and children, to the refuge of the farm. Crowded quarters, jarring personalities, and jealousies made a year of discord in the old home, but better times bring a note of hope for the future." Bkl.

Jonathan's daughter, by Lida Larrimore (pseud.). Macrae Smith co. 1933 349p $2

Also available from Grosset at 85c

"Ann Lowell's life had been a succession of fashionable schools and drab boarding houses, for Jonathan, her father, was a journalist whose fortunes rose and fell by turns. When Jonathan finally wrote his successful novel, Ann hoped that he would be willing to settle down. But she was unprepared for a stepmother. In the meantime she had met Sandy MacArdle, and the memory of Sandy persisted until Ann was called upon to decide between loyalty to her father and her love for Sandy." Book rev. digest

Mulberry square, by Lida Larrimore (pseud.). Grosset 290p 85c

First published 1930 by Macrae Smith co.

"Little brown Janie, redeemed from planness by her 'wide gay smile,' gives her whole-hearted devotion to the red-haired young doctor who comes to help her father with his down-at-the-heel patients in Mulberry Square. But Janie hasn't a chance after lovely, selfish sister Cecil comes home. A sprightly style and touches of humor transform this rather obvious tale of the final triumph of modest worth, into a pleasing, light, very light, romance." Cleveland

"When she was eighteen Sally Kent came to New York to spend a vacation with her mother, Laurel Kent, a famous actress. Laurel was about to retire from the stage and marry Martin Faies, a fact that Sally did not know. Before she discovered the truth Sally had fallen in love with Martin, and it took considerable tact to set matters straight." Book rev. digest

"Shirley Penfield had lived since childhood in her cousin Eleanor's beautiful home Robin Hill, near Philadelphia, and since childhood she had been in love with Eleanor's devonair son Rickey. When she discovered that Rickey loved Elaine, Shirley was heartbroken but loyal. Later when difficulties, financial and otherwise, beset the household at Robin Hill, it was she who came to the rescue. It was not until much later that Shirley could see Rickey as he really was, and then she discovered that she was in love with the dependable John." Book rev. digest

"Romantic fiction with Maryland's eastern shore as setting. Julia was gifted with charm and beauty; her lack of a sense of responsibility and her failure to face unpleasant facts were defects that her family and her friends excused. However, when she found herself engaged to two men, her butterfly existence became complicated and other people were involved to the point of tragedy. Julia had her lesson and everything turned out for the best." Bkl.

Two keys to a cabin, by Lida Larrimore (pseud.). Macrae Smith co. 1936 319p $2

Also available from Grosset at 85c

"A young, struggling doctor, and a wealthy girl each have been given a key to a cabin in the woods, and each thinks the cabin a private possession. After a week at the cabin together, properly chaperoned, the girl decides not to marry the man she is engaged to, and that is the story." Book rev. digest

"Pleasant light novel of a charming, improvident and exasperating southern family, spending a summer in New England. Faith, the daughter who inherits the Yankee strain of her father's people, is trying to hold things together by taking boarders, an effort the others do their charming best to foil. Amusing situations, good dialog and a satisfactory love story will contribute to its popularity." Wis. bul.

Contents. Preacher goes to Texas; Preacher goes to war, Preacher learns to pray; He lost his pig but he saved his bacon; As he thinketh in his heart, Stars in their courses; Man's bound to fight; Name and a flag

"This is a collection of eight short stories, or episodes, from the life of the Rev. Praxiteles Swan, fire-eating, red-headed Methodist preacher who came out of Texas as a chaplain to accompany the Texas men who fought in the Army of Northern Virginia and who soon became a roaring, indomitable captain of infantry, fighting in all the bloody engagements in which that great army took part." These men, thy friends. Harcourt 1928 319p o.p. 1941

"Perhaps no narrative of war experiences depicts with more bitter earnestness or reality the courage, degradation, suffering, and questioning of men, enmeshed in the futilities of war, than this account of a group of men in the British campaign in Mesopotamia, who discuss, criticize, and analyze their experiences. It is written in fine prose permeated by flashes of humor, biting irony, and human insight." Bkl.

"To help keep her brother in medical school, Janet Mackenzie utilized her training and experience in art school and secured a job as junior assistant in the interior decorating firm of Anstell and Bond. . . y Highway past her door; decorations by Vera Neville. Longmans 1938 235p illus $2 (W)

"Judith Van Duyn, after her grandmother's death, found herself with an old farm house, an apple orchard and $1,100. The failure to find a job in town and the decision to establish a roadside stand for selling fruit, fresh vegetables and other farm produce make a story full of interest. While the venture is a success, it is not without many mishaps, disappointments, and sacrifices. A thread of mystery runs through the story and there is the suggestion of a romance. The book will appeal because of the story with its modern background and good character delineation." Wis. bul.

Battle of the horizons. Little 1928 322p
o.p. 1941

"A beautiful, wealthy American girl, immature, self-assured and full of romantic preconceptions about English life and character, marries into a cultured English family in moderate circumstances. The inevitable clash of temperaments and ideals is worked out sympathetically but from the English point of view." Cleveland

Breakfast in bed. Little 1934 309p o.p. 1941

"Starting with the breakfast hour, and continuing through each hour of the day until bedtime, we are given an intimate glimpse of the lives of a group of Londoners. The scene is laid in the household of Sir Frederick Nicholson and by skillful contrast between the lives of the servants and those of the family, the author makes the picture both vivid and comprehensive." Wis. bul.

Chariot wheels. Little 1929 307p o.p. 1941

"Lester Midge, an English novelist who uses his diverse amours as material for his successful novels but always returns to his wife as to a warm hearth, learns only after his Cressida's death, that he has not been 'the light by which she lived,' that all the years and until it was too late, she has held within the bounds of quiet friendship an alien love that was the core and meaning of her life. A vivid study of a wife who makes the gallant best of a bad bargain, and of a husband of whom it is said, 'the silliest woman can put her foot on the self-starter of his vanity and he is off with her at any pace she likes.'" Cleveland

Gulls fly inland. Little 1941 278p $2.50 (W)

"The story of Blanche Lancret, a young French woman who is living in England . . . awaiting the return of Vernon Strudwick, an American whom she has loved since she was a young girl and who would now be free to come to her were it not for the war. And, in order to keep alive memories exceedingly dear to her . . . she relives the past." Hunting

Hounds of spring. Little 1926 366p o.p. 1941

"Well written novel covering the years 1914 to 1924. A young girl whose lover is lost in the war marries another man in an effort to forget, and then the lover, who was missing, not killed as reported, returns. The solution seems unconvincing, but may be taken perhaps as an indication of the attitude of the younger generation toward responsibility." Wis. bul.

Portrait by Caroline. Little 1931 288p o.p. 1941

"Caroline is a successful artist married to a young doctor absorbed in research. Restless, and a sensationalist she deliberately falls in love with Peter Stanley, an author friend of her husband, because he 'makes her live.' Her portrait of Peter shows his virile and sophisticated side but, as his sister-in-law says, 'He is so much simpler—so very much more gentle than that.' A book which is brilliant but evokes no emotional response." Cleveland

Unfinished symphony. Little 1933 289p $2.50

"An English playright, bored by his success and the shallowness and insincerity of his home life, escapes to an island in the Mediterranean taking with him his youngest daughter Helena. When he dies the eighteen-year-old Helena, who has been trained by her father for unconventional and honest living, returns to her family—an unfinished symphony. The story reveals the series of shocks by which this beautiful and disturbing creature becomes fitted into the new 'design for living.' Book rev digest

"A novel of imagined character constructed around the paintings and scanty legend of the incomparable Flemish realist, Pieter Breughel Gives a rich, diversified and robust picture of the sixteenth century Flanders scene, but Pieter himself is misfitted with the tender soul of an Alphonse Daudet. "The authors have patterned this tetralogy of romances picturing life in Old New Orleans upon a like series by Edith Wharton entitled 'Old New York.' The first volume of the four, 'Widows only,' has for its background Creole life in the sixties. 'Strife,' the second, depicts the carpet-baggers of the seventies. The third, 'Closed shutters,' set in the eighties, is a poignant drama dealing with the life of two proud but impoverished aristocrats. 'Mardi Gras masks,' the final story, is a comedy-romance of the nineties that reaches its climax during the fêtes of Mardi Gras Week." Book rev digest

 "Gives a direct, truthful, unsentimen-talized and unheightened transcript of life in all its multitudinous and complex phases. . . The main action is profoundly tragic—a woman of fine nature forsakes husband for lover, and after a bitter experience finds rest in suicide." Baker's
 Best
 "For its artistic qualities, Anna Karenina stands foremost among the many beautiful things Tolstoi has written. It is also a work of high moral import, for without sacrificing its value as a masterpiece of art Tolstoi demonstrates through its characters and events that a generous soul cannot live outside the moral law."

 "Presents in the author's usual powerful vein the absorbing theme of the development of a great character, besides offering a picture of Russian society, from the wealthy office-holding circle, to the peasants and common soldiers, jailers, and criminal classes. . . In this story Tolstoy

"In addition to the translator's preface, which includes a brief biography of Tolstoy, Clifton Fadiman has written for the Inner Sanctum Edition an entirely new introduction. In this he presents a critical interpretation of the novel, as well as an analysis of the present-day historical and military significance of War and Peace." Note about the Inner Sanctum edition of War and peace

"A panorama of Russian affairs, public and private, at the time of the Napoleonic wars. . . A multitude of characters are presented, officers and men, both French and Russian, the hostile emperors and their suites, gentry living quietly in Moscow or on their estates, great people of fashion, serfs, and all intermediate classes. The more important are portrayed from the inside, and the reader sees through their eyes, and coloured by their emotions, the entire life of the nation throughout this tremendous epoch. Real personages occupy almost as much space as the fictitious, and are drawn with the same unerring insight." Baker's Best

* All our yesterdays. Harper 1930 445p y $2.50

"British events in the cause of empire are presented in panorama from 1900 to 1918 in this reflective war novel which has less of actual warfare than of war's causes and its effects on human lives. Not likely to capture the popular imagination as some war books have, but it should be widely read, and those who do read it will re-read it, for it is free from sentiment, cynicism and bitterness." Ontario library review

Day before; a romantic chronicle. Putnam 1939 297p $2.50

"London as it was during the years just before 1914 is presented mainly from the points of view of two journalists and an intelligent young working woman. . . A dock strike, suffragette activities, life on a British cruiser, an inimitable account of the coronation, a glimpse of tenement life, and a brief, memorable account of the sinking of the 'Titanic' give flavor to Mr Tomlinson's picture of the period. There is no plot, what story there is moves very slowly and has a hint of a mystery which never materializes." Bkl.

* Gallions Reach. Harper 1927 283p illus y $2.50

"Jim Colet, a clerk in Perriam's shipping office strikes the head of the firm, who falls dead from the blow. Colet wanders to Gallions Reach, a section of the London waterfront and boards a ship leaving for the tropics. The ship is wrecked in the Indian Ocean. Colet is picked up by a liner and reaches Malaya. His final adventure is a journey of exploration into the heart of the Malay jungle. He comes out of that cataclysmic experience a new man, resolved to go back to Gallions Reach and lay the ghost of Perriam. The story is episodic. The author's chief concern is the spiritual odyssey of his hero." Book rev. digest.

Pipe all hands. Harper 1937 326p
o.p. 1941

"The freighter 'Hestia' is the main character; her officers and crew have a superstitious regard for her. Although believing that she is unsound they cling to her with a loyalty quite unrecognized by her owners to whom she is scarcely known. A professor and his daughter are taken as passengers on a long trip during which the ship encounters a hurricane. No real plot and almost no action; slow reading but the sections about the sea and ship are real. English title: 'All hands.'" Bkl.

wife never sees him again. Travers has heard that in order to establish an important radio station a beautiful Greek temple on the island of Colonna is to be dynamited. That temple becomes to him the symbol of all beauty and he resolves to save it from destruction. After long wanderings he comes at last to Colonna, too late to save the temple, but in time to perish with it." Book rev. digest

Tutt stages a rodeo; Leaf from King John;
Mr Tutt collects a bet; "The last shall be first"; Life in the old dog yet
"Mr. Tutt is still at his old game of playing the legal Robin Hood, using his kindly wisdom and his complete grasp of the trickery of the law to unseat the uppity and raise up the under dog. . . . In this collection of ten stories . . . Mr. Tutt pokes a finger into cases of burglary, horse stealing, bootlegging and murder."
N.Y. Times

* Tassels on her boots. Scribner 1940 301p illus $2.75 (W)

"For background, Arthur Train has chosen New York City in the days of Boss Tweed and his 'Ring,' and around Barry Carter, a young lawyer from South Carolina, and lovely Kathleen O'Carroll, he spins his story of New York society and politics in the General Grant era. Inter-persed with the . . . romance and the account of Barry's part in breaking the rule of that . . . unscrupulous gang, is a great amount of . . . authentic 'little old
New York' background." Hunting

Tutt and Mr Tutt. Scribner 1920 348p

 Death ship; the story of an American sailor. Knopf 1934 372p $2
 "The narrator, a New Orleans sailor, begins his story in Antwerp where he was stranded without money, friends, or identification papers when his ship left port without him. The first third of the book tells the experiences of this man without country or identity, as he was shunted over Europe from one nation to another. Finally, he gets a ship—the Yorikke, which had been sent away by the owners to be sunk for its insurance. His experiences in the stokehold of this dreadful death ship make up the rest of the story." Trollope, Anthony, 1815-1882

American senator; introduction by H. S. Drinker; prolegomenon by A. E. Newton. Random house 561p $2.50

"A revision of a long out-of-print novel first published 1877, well printed and attractively bound." Bkl.

"A little-known but excellent story, with a more or less misleading title." Prolegomenon

Senator Elias Gotobed "represents the great Western State of Mickewa, and through him the author pokes good-natured fun both at the drabness of American culture, and at certain established English institutions, such as the purchase of livings, and the appointment thereto of younger sons of the nobility." Introduction

First published 1864-65. One of the series of "Parliamentary novels"

"A study of the half-realized motives and minor causes that determine conduct. [The heroine] breaks off an engagement because she is infected with modern ideas on the duties and importance of women, and craves excitement. Plantagenet Palliser, who figures repeatedly in the Phineas novels, is a character here." Baker's Best

Doctor Thorne. Dodd 2v ea $2

First published 1858. Third of the "Chronicles of Barsetshire"

"A story of quiet country life; and the interest of the book lies in the character studies rather than in the plot. The scene is laid in the west of England about 1854. The heroine, Mary Thorne, is a sweet, modest girl, living with her kind uncle Doctor Thorne, in the village of Gresham-bury, where Frank Gresham, the young heir of Greshambury Park falls in love with her." Framley parsonage. Dodd 2v ea $2

Also available in the "Everyman's library" (Dutton 90c)

First appeared serially in the "Cornhill magazine" in 1860; in book form in 1861. Fourth of the "Chronicles of Barsetshire"

"The vicar of Framley, a weak but honest young man, is led astray and into debt by a spendthrift M. P., and finds himself in a false position. The other branch of the story deals with his sister's chequered love affair and marriage to young Lord Lufton. A great crowd of characters are engaged in the social functions, the intrigues and the match making, the general effect of which is comic, though graver interest is never far off, and there are situations of deepest pathos." Baker's Best

Last chronicle of Barset. Dodd 3v ea $2

Also obtainable in "Everyman's library" (Dutton 90c)

First published 1867. Sixth of the "Chronicles of Barsetshire."

"The ecclesiastical society of The Warden, Mr Harding, Mrs Proudie, and the rest, make their last appearance. The dominant situation is one of intense anguish. A poor country clergyman, proud, learned, sternly conscientious is accused of a felony, and the pressure of family want makes his guilt seem only too probable." Baker

Orley farm. Dodd 3v ea $2

First published 1861-62. One of the "Manor house novels"

"A lengthy chronicle of family life (two country houses supply most of the chief personages) events revolving round one figure, Lady Mason, a mixed character of guilt and innocence, weakness and strength, who forges a codicil in favour of her son and keeps the secret for twenty years. A chivalrous old baronet, his high-minded daughter-in-law, and a dry old lawyer, are all under the spell of Lady Mason's personality, and the drama of guilt and shame has a pathetic bearing on many lives. The legal case is complex and difficult." Baker's Best

Phineas Finn, the Irish member. Dodd 3v ea $2

Also available in "Everyman's library" (Dutton 2v ea 90c)

First published 1866. One of the series of "Parliamentary novels"

"Traces the career of an Irishman, young and attractive, who goes to London to enter Parliament, leaving behind his boyish sweetheart, Mary Flood-Jones. He is admired by many, especially by Lady Laura Standish, who is succeeded by another love, Violet Effingham, and she by a charming widow, Marie Max-Goesler. In time he gives up politics, goes home, and becomes Inspector of Poor-Houses in County Cork." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

Anthony Trollope's "Phineas Redux" (Dodd 3v ea $2) is a sequel in which Phineas goes back to Parliament, is accused of crime and is tried in the old Bailey

Prime minister. Dodd 3v ea $2

First published 1876. One of the series of "Parliamentary novels"

Chiefly devoted to the unhappy marriage of Emily Wharton and Ferdinand Lopez, a Portuguese adventurer, and to the affairs of the prime minister and his wife. The latter couple are known to readers of Trollope's earlier novels as Planty Paul and Lady Glencora, now Duke and Duchess of Omnium. The duke is sensitive, proud, and shy, and feels the burden of his responsibility, while his wife is forever working for his advancement. He goes gladly out of office at last." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

Anthony Trollope's "Duke's children" (Dodd 3v o.p. 1941) continues the story of the Duke of Omnium after the death of his wife. It also concerns the fortunes of his son Lord Silverbridge and his daughter Lady Mary

This novel of the prize-ring is not artistically constructed nor literary in any sense of the word, but the story is swiftly moving and vigorous, with just enough of disorder and emotion to make it a thoroughly human document. . . Mr Tully knows the prize fighting game inside and out from first-hand experience. His observation has been keen and he tells an effective story of this lower stratum of American life in a clipped and vehement style, occasionally slopping over into sentimentality and triteness." "A reply to 'The Possessed' of Dostoevsky, which was itself called out by the Nihilist doctrines in 'Fathers and Children.' Both Turgenev and Dostoevsky deal with the same theme: the subterranean world of political agitation and conspiracy then threatening the peace of Russia. Like 'Smoke' (which also was written in exile from Russia), this is bitter in feeling and deeply pessimistic. The faint-hearted Neshdanov, despairing of the cause of socialism, in which he and the girl he loves are workers, takes his own life. The official classes are painted in dark colours." Baker's Best

Mist; tr. from the Spanish by Warner
 Fite. Knopf 1928 332p o.p. 1941
 "Augusto Pérez loses himself frequently in a mist of ideas. This young Spanish gentleman has fallen in love with a vision he passed on the street. What time he is not awkwardly wooing the lady he spends in agitated thoughts of his life and the romance of it. Eugenia is betrothed to another, and when it becomes clear to Augusto that she is trifling with him, he contemplates suicide. He takes his troubles to the author who reminds the unhappy youth that his life is not his own to dispose of, since the end, as the beginning, rests with the author who invented it." Book rev digest

Undset, Sigrid—Continued

Burning bush; tr. from the Norwegian by

A. G. Chater. Knopf 1932 472p $2.50

"The sequel to Wild Orchid covers the years from the beginning of the first World war to 1925, and describes the final steps in Paul Selmer's conversion to Catholicism and his growing estrangement from his young wife, Björg." Book rev. digest

The cross

In Undset, S. Kristin Lavransdatter v3

Faithful wife; tr. from the Norwegian by

A. G. Chater. Knopf 1937 366p $2.50

"After sixteen years of happy married life, Nathalie Nordgaard learns that her husband, tho he still loves her, has become entangled with another woman and that there is to be a child. Nathalie consents to a divorce, and later accepts a former suitor as a lover, but when circumstances open the way to a reconciliation, she takes her husband back." Book rev. digest

Gunnar's daughter; tr. from the Norwegian by A. G. Chater. Knopf 1936

274p $2

"A fierce little tale of medieval Scandinavia, in which one of those dour heroines affected by Sigrid Undset takes a bloody revenge on the man who had betrayed her. Done very skillfully, in regulation saga style, but somehow lacking in the richness and humanity of Mrs. Undset's major historical novels." New Yorker

Ida Elisabeth; tr. from the Norwegian for the first time by A. G. Chater. Knopf

1933 433p $2.50

"Finding herself tied to a husband irresponsible and permanently immature, Ida Elisabeth provides for the family until Frithjof is unfaithful. Then when she has made for herself and her young children a new life, comes a conflict between love for a good man and duty to her children. An excellent character study, appealing to the thoughtful reader." N.Y. libraries

Images in a mirror; tr. from the Norwegian by A. G. Chater. Knopf 1938

229p $2

Story of a fine couple who are devoted to each other and their children, but whose happiness is marred by the woman's memories of the past

In the wilderness

In Undset, S. Master of Hestviken v3

* Kristin Lavransdatter. . . Knopf 3v in 1 y $3.50

Contains three novels originally published separately as follows: Bridal wreath, 1923; Mistress of Husaby, 1925; The cross, 1927

The scene is laid in Norway in the first half of the fourteenth century

"Though it is a story of medieval Norway, Kristin is as alive as any woman of today. The whole constitutes one of the most complete stories of a woman's life ever written." Wis. bul.

Longest years; tr. from the Norwegian by A. G. Chater. Knopf 1935 332p

"A childhood autobiography thinly disguised as fiction. The poignantly remembered experiences of Ingvald, daughter and close companion of an archeologist, who spent her winters in Christiania and her summers in Denmark, are the author's personal history, the record of a sensitive child's reactions to life." Bkl.

Madame Dorthea; tr. from the Norwegian by A. G. Chater. Knopf 1940 351p

$2.50 (W)

The scene is laid in 18th century Norway, and the story hinges on the disappearance of Madame Dorthea's husband

* Master of Hestviken; tr. from the Norwegian by A. G. Chater. Knopf 1934 4v in 1 $3.50

Contains four volumes originally published separately as follows: The axe, 1928; Snake pit, 1929; In the wilderness, 1929; and Son avenger, 1930

"A rich picture of Norwegian life in the Middle ages (13th and 14th centuries), and resembles the 'Kristin Lavransdatter' trilogy in that it is concerned with the secret sin of a pair of young lovers their suffering and final atonement." Cleveland
"No one . . . in the historical novel has given such realism to bygone days and such genius to the evocation of the past." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Published in England under title: Gymnadenia

"Brought up by a free-thinking mother of the Ibsen generation to have no conventional ideas of religion or sex, Paul Selmer, early in his university career, finds himself reacting to his training. He lost his pretty servant-girl mistress by wanting to marry her, and his growing interest in Catholicism overshadows all else in the book. . . The book closes with Paul at thirty, emerged in business, married to a mere child, and facing the Great war of 1914." Bkl.

Lone wolf. Little 1916 315p o.p. 1941

Out of the shadows through which the Seine flows there came the Lone Wolf, the most sinister, diabolical figure ever to emerge from the evil underworld of Paris. This story of an amazing career opens with Michael Lanyard as a boy driven first by hunger and then by a pride in his art, from the slums of Paris into the halls of the mighty. At the height of his fame, something settled upon the Lone Wolf's heart. The hatred went out of his eyes and the snarl died in his throat. The secret of his change is revealed in this masterful story

Forty stay in; a novel. Harper 1931 323p o.p. 1941

"The triteness of the plot—an illicit love affair of a young American and an official's wife—is compensated for by the excellence of the descriptions and the graphic portrayal of the vagaries of government in the black republic of Liberia. The title is a line from an old chantey of the African slavers, expressing the spell that Africa casts on white men. 'For one that comes out, there's forty stay in.'" Bkl.

Young Woodley; a novel. Day 1929 301p o.p. 1941

"A novel from the play of the same name. Young Woodley is an English schoolboy of poetic, sensitive nature, grappling with the perplexities of sex and life. His friend Amger gives only an indirect answer to his questions, his enemy Vining only an obscene one. With the housemaster Woodley is utterly out of sympathy, but for his young wife the boy conceives a tender romantic love that brings to a focus all his troubling doubts and wistful dreams. It is the crisis and the end of his adolescence, and of his life at school." Book rev digest

Outward bound. Minton 1930 302p o.p. 1941

"The author of the successful play Outward Bound has turned the play into a novel. It tells the story of that strange collection of passengers aboard a ship, and no one of them seems to remember embarking. Slowly it penetrates to each one that they are the dead, and their ship is outward bound to unknown shores." Book rev. digest

I am the fox. Little 1936 358p o.p. 1941

"A man and a girl, on the threshold of an engagement, stand on a hillside watching the progress of a fox hunt. To the man it is good sport, to the girl it is a fearful thing and all her sympathy goes out to the hunted, making her say 'I am the fox.' The story then goes back into the girl's past and in episode after episode from early childhood to young maturity reveals the reasons for her feeling." Book rev. digest

* Nigger heaven. Knopf 1926 286p $2.50

"'Nigger heaven' tells a story of modern Negro life in the greatest Negro city in the world, the district of Harlem in New York city which is given over to this race. The characters who enter into the story are mostly Negroes of the wealthier and more educated class, the hero being a young graduate of the University of Pennsylvania who comes to New York with ambitions to become a writer but who has not developed sufficient stamina to withstand the vices to which he is introduced. His character gives way under the strain and he loses all self-respect. In the course of his brief downward career, the abnormal conditions under which the Negro is living in New York, his intellectual strivings, his opinions on race questions, the pleasures and vices of night life, his whole social background, are shown in detail." Peter Whiffle; his life and works. Knopf 1927 244p $2.50

"Recalls Huxner, and Cabell, and Arthur Machen, whose disciple Peter aspired to be. A recital of strange adventures, a catalogue of curious scenes, and books and plays. But Peter should have been created with a little more care. He should have been made either less or more real." E. L. Pearson

Spider boy; a scenario for a moving picture. Knopf 1928 297p o.p. 1941

"The astonished author of a Broadway hit becomes a celebrity overnight. Hollywood seizes the new lion, stars and producers fight over him, and he is bullied into signing a contract for a scenario he is neither expected nor allowed to write. An actress carries out her threat to marry him and complete subjection to Hollywood impends. The story is light, and lightly written." Book rev. digest

"This is not really a novel. It is a highly colored, detailed painting of a wedding in a Persian-Armenian village of Northwestern Persia, a varied 'genre' scene of a complex traditional ceremony. The whole is seen simply and effectively through the eyes of a young boy, who conceives an adolescent passion for the beautiful bride. This thread of story, complicated by the bride's secret love for

Captain Conan; tr. from the French by W. B. Wells. Holt 1935 296p o.p. 1941

"This novel which was awarded the Prix Goncourt, 1934, is based on the author's experiences with the French army of the Balkans, after the Armistice. It is the story of Captain Conan, a former draper from a small Breton town. The war has inspired in him a species of false courage and recklessness, and has made him leader of a band of tough storm troopers. Arrested for manslaughter, Conan redeems his reputation by a final burst of bravado." Book rev. digest

Lena; tr. from the French by W. B. Wells Random house 1937 276p o.p. 1941

"Just before a duel in which he allowed himself to be killed, a French lieutenant relates to a friend the truth about his experiences during the last months of the World war [of 1914-1918]. He was wounded, and a prisoner of the Bulgarians. Lena, a beautiful, ruthless Bulgarian woman, was the doctor who cared for the wounded during an impossible mountain journey in carts. Later she befriended the Frenchman during an Albanian raid which concludes the tragic story. The personal brutality and degradation caused by war is the theme. Well written and well translated."  "Naked Year" is a picture of the Russian countryside during the famine of 1921. The nation was blocked by foreign navies, White armies were plundering and burning whole towns, crops were rotting, factories and mills were yawning for raw materials and labor that could not be supplied. Pilnyak depicts this ghastly year with a deep sense of its tragedy, its tumultuous upheavals and its cruel decay. It is not a pretty book, but it is terribly real." N.Y. Evening post

The Volga falls to the Caspian sea; by Boris Pilnyak (pseud; tr. from the Russian by Charles Malamuth. Cosmopolitan bk. 1931 353p o.p. 1941

"A river can be made to change its course, but whether or not the same thing can be done to a nation is a question proposed, but not answered by this symbolic novel of New Russia. The scene is the town of Kolonna where a great dam is nearing completion. The people involved in the building of this dam are sacrificed to the spirit which impels Russia to control, for the common good, not only the forces of nature but the lives of her people as well. A powerful book but difficult reading, doubtless because of an unsatisfactory translation and an involved plot." Bkl.

Fireweed. Harcourt 1934 314p illus o.p. 1941

"In northern Wisconsin, or Michigan, or Minnesota, wherever you find cutover land and slashings that have been burned, you will find that bright gay flower, the willow herb, or fireweed. And also you will find little milltowns, all alike, with the one central mill and dismal, temporary-looking houses. In one such town, Flat Point, in upper Michigan, lives Celie Henderson. Celie, the daughter of Swedish parents, is pretty and blond, and ambitious to get away to the bright world that she reads about and sees in the movies. But Celie marries Joe, children come, the mill closes, and depression ends the hope of an outside job. She must accept Flat Point and her fate, but she has Joe and the children and knows that somehow they'll get along." Wis. bul.

Captain Nicholas; a modern comedy. Sun dial 429p 69c

First published 1934 by Doubleday

"The Carlises were a contented, apparently normal and loving family living in London. Suddenly, after a ten-year's silence, Fanny Carlisle's scapegrace brother Nicholas burst in upon them, bringing his small daughter and intending to make his future home with the Carlises. Gradually, almost imperceptibly, Nicholas insinuated himself into the confidence of the various members of the family, worming out of them their little secrets, and using his knowledge to his advantage. Peace and happiness vanished from the home, distrust became the order of the day, until in one dramatic scene Fanny ousted Nicholas from her household forever." Book rev. digest

"Judith Paris, who was born on the last page of 'Rogue Herries,' and who played a game of ducks and drakes with the Herries' fortunes, here comes into her own. This novel is the story of her feud with Walter Herries, who builds 'The fortress' at Ireby. It is also the story of the whole Herries family grown wealthy and powerful in London trade, and through them, the story of England after Waterloo. It forms a complete novel in itself, and is one of the best volumes in this chronicle of an English family, covering a period of English social life from 1825 to 1875." Ontario library review

- Harmer John; an unworldly story. Doran 1926 411p o.p. 1941

"Ushered in by wind and rain Hjaemar Johanson come to the cathedral town of Polchester. He was a Swede, a gymnasium instructor, who carried in his great splendid frame the gentle heart of a dreamer. He opened a gymnasium in Polchester, and because the town was ready for the cult of the physical, it was a success from the first. But unfortunately for himself, Harmer John, as Polchester called him, had an interest in men's souls that exceeded his concern for their bodies. He preached to them a new and beautiful Polchester free from slums, from vice and degradation. Even the canons of the cathedral were divided, some with Harmer John, others secretly against him. As his mission persisted, the town that had enthusiastically taken him up turned as fiercely against him, and in a storm of hate cast him out. Tho he lost in love as in his great cause, the book closes on Harmer John a compelling, triumphant figure." Book rev digest

- The inquisitor; a novel. Doubleday 1935 485p o.p. 1941

"Polchester, the small English cathedral town which was the scene of three of the author's earlier books: Harmer John, The Cathedral, and The Old Ladies, is the background for the present novel. The time is the present. An old usurer, whom many in the town have reason to hate, suddenly disappeared and his ghost was said to walk the town. Strange things took place in Polchester, in which the Cathedral itself seemed to take part. The action culminated when the inhabitants of Seatown, a nearby slum district, rioted at the very door of the Cathedral." Book rev. digest

Prayer for my son; a novel. Doubleday 1936 355p o p 1941

"At his father's death, Rose Clennell gave up her illegitimate son to his grandfather, who made him his heir. Invited to visit them ten years later, she found the grandfather, half-mad, planning to use the boy to promote his own lust for power. The suspense of the contest over the boy is heightened by the sense of foreboding and horror that permeates the household." Bkl.

Wintersmoon. Doubleday 1928 446p o p 1941

"A story of post-war London society and of two sisters who symbolize two ways of life. The elder, Janet, conservative and dutiful, stands loyal to her traditions, while Rosalind, the younger, represents the modernism of the younger generation. Janet's marriage to Lord Poole is one of convenience, entered into, on her side, to provide for her dearly loved Rosalind and on his side, because Wintersmoon needs an heir. They achieve a fine friendship, growing on Janet's part into a passionate love for her husband, which, unfortunately, he is slow in reciprocating. Rosalind's marriage, like her character, is sharply contrasted with Janet's the one ending in tragedy and the other developing into a truly spiritual union." Book rev digest

Young enchanted. Doran 1921 335p o p 1941

"This is the story of Henry and Millicent Trenchard, who look out upon the world with fresh young eyes full of imagination and a zest for life. Henry, with a poet's soul, falls in love at first sight with a girl and, since she does not respond, deems himself happy when he can rescue her from a wicked mother and hand her over safely to an uncle from Denmark, Millicent, as secretary to a newly rich, warm-hearted, but foolish woman, has a romantic love affair with a man who proves himself unworthy, tears herself loose with much heartache, and finds consolation with Peter Westcott, Henry's tried friend and her own." Wassermann, Jakob, 1873-1934

Caspar Hauser; tr. by Caroline Newton. Liveright 1928 467p o.p. 1941
 "The famous and disputed Caspar Hauser was a pretender who never pretended to anything and yet caused an extraordinary unrest which found no end in a hundred years and at last inspired Jacob Wassermann to examine all the evidence afresh and transform historical research into a novel published in Germany in 1908 and now [1928] for the first time translated into English" Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

* Doctor Kerkhoven; tr. from the German by Cyrus Brooks Liveright 1932 646p $3

"A sequel to the Maurizius Case. . . . This novel is in two parts: the first part taking place just before the war of 1814-1818, relates the story of a young physician, Dr Kerkhoven, who, coming under the influence of an older man, discovers in himself a psychic power of healing. In the second part, after the war, the chief protagonist of the Maurizius Case, Etzel von Andergast, enters the story as Dr Kerkhoven's disciple and eventually as the seducer of his wife. The story ends with Etzel's return to his mother." Book rev. digest
 Followed by "Kerkhoven's third existence"

Faber; or, The lost years; authorized tr. by Harry Hansen. Harcourt 1925 347p o.p. 1941

"The story is that of a young German architect who returns to his native city after a five-and-half years' absence, most of it as a prisoner, and after a sensational escape through Siberia—the glimpses we get of this remind us of Ossendowski's adventures—to find himself unable to resume his married life. But Wassermann, who is even more of a philosopher than a story teller, deals with this young man's crisis and with the corresponding difficulties of his wife, Martina, not only in terms of their individual relations, but in terms of the social forces which have made their personalities." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Gold; authorized tr. by L. C. Willcox. Harcourt 1924 431p o.p. 1941

"'Gold' is a long story covering with some detail the life and the adventures during a period of forty years of Ulrika Woytich, who makes her first appearance in the book as a heroine of the dreadful Ring Theatre fire in Vienna in 1881, and who soon reveals herself thereafter as the attendant dark angel of the family Mylius. . . . Herr Mylius is a millionaire, a fact which he conceals from his wife and children and those unfortunates live meekly a life of oppressions under his rules of economy and seclusion. Ulrika becoming a favored guest after her bravery at the Ring, soon changes the order of things in the household. Cunningly she works out of Mylius the secret of his wealth. . . . For the enterprising Ulrika graft accumulates while the family decays. And in the story of the Mylius downfall is that sad tale of gold which Herr Wassermann has spread over more than 400 pages of clever telling." N.Y. World

* Kerkhoven's third existence; tr. by Eden and Cedar Paul. Liveright 1934 646p $3

"Wassermann's last completed work forms the third volume of his long, philosophical, semiautobiographical novel, which tells the story of Joseph Kerkhoven, a German psychiatrist. The story opens with Kerkhoven's discovery of his wife's infidelity, and concludes with an account of the events of the last few days before his death. Embodied in the novel is the long story of one of Kerkhoven's patients, Alexander Herzog, a German novelist, who is suffering from the effects of an unhappy marriage and divorce. For earlier volumes see The Maurizius Case, and Doctor Kerkhoven." Book rev. digest

Maurizius case; tr. by Caroline Newton. Liveright 1929 546p $3

"A study of social injustices, primarily, rather than of any individual or individuals. But noteworthy here for the disintegration of character suffered by the prosecuting attorney when, 18 years after he had condemned Maurizius to life imprisonment for murder, he is convinced by his youthful son that his decision in the case was unjustified. The lawyer's reactions are carefully followed as the case is reopened and the prisoner's innocence at last established." Lenrow

Oberlin's three stages; tr. by A. W. Porterfield. Harcourt 1926 350p o.p. 1941

"Introduced by a short mystical tale, The unknown guest, which in the mind of the author is a 'bridge' to the longer story that follows, Oberlin's three stages, is a psychological study, minute and delicate, of the growing consciousness of a seventeen-year-old boy and the stages by which he reaches independent thought and being. First there is traced the influence of a teacher, a man of unusual gifts, between whom and Oberlin the relation is as master and loved disciple. In the next stage Oberlin is beginning to be conscious of and disturbed by women, including his mother. The third stage is marked by his love for two sisters. Another short story, Sturroganz, completes the book." Book rev. digest

Triumph of youth; tr. from the German by O. P. Schinnerer. Liveright 1927 205p o.p. 1941

"Based on an incident said to have occurred in Germany early in the Thirty years war, this is the fairy-like story of an imaginative lad, nephew of the Bishop of Wurzburg. The lad's art as a weaver of tales has won the affections of the countryside and he is followed about wherever he goes by an eager audience of young and old. But the witchery of his tales is pronounced black magic by the church, and the boy is condemned to die. Enraged, his followers rally 'en masse' to the rescue." Book rev. digest

Wedlock; tr. by Ludwig Lewisohn. Liveright 1926 344p o.p. 1941

"To Frederick Laudin, a prominent lawyer, all sorts of people come for advice on all sorts of problems. These problems, however, can usually be traced back to an unhappy or a sordid love affair. In one case a woman is seeking a part of the money left her by her married lover, his wife having destroyed the will. In another case a youth kills himself for an actress who plays upon his emotions. Laudin himself feels her influence, and is for a time estranged from his wife. There is still another triangular case. The principals of all these tangled affairs add something to the pattern of a psychological novel in which Laudin and his wife are the eventually reconciled protagonists." Book rev. digest

"An amusing, intelligent novel of college life in the South, the issue being education vs. 'progress.' As described by Mr Watkin, campus conversation below Mason and Dixon's line is gossipy, spiteful, leisuredly, cheerfully professional, and rather pleasant. The romantic complication is furnished by the married life of a young professor of history and his Yankee wife, who doesn't understand Southerners." New Yorker

"Left alone in the world with his small grandson Pud, grandfather Northrup, when called for by Death, treed that gentleman by a trick, in the apple orchard, and determined to hold him there until Pud was grown up. No one died in the world, no pests could be killed, no animals slaughtered, until Death showed grandfather that his coming could be a relief and a mercy. The book mixes fantasy with the realism of small town pettiness, and its appeal will be limited to those with a taste for imaginative fiction." Bkl

N.Y. state lib.

Van Cleve. Macmillan 1913 396p o.p. 1941

"This is a work of realistic fiction of the highest type—a story of Ohio in the nineties. It is a study of a decayed family of gentlefolk of the old southern stock, of which the grandson, Van Cleve Kendrick, the least picturesque of all its members, is the saving grace. Van Cleve is unpicturesque, unromantic and plodding; he goes to work at eighteen, sticks to his job and makes money. He is accounted 'close' and hard and unsympathetic, but he proves capable of a high act of knight-errantry, a loyal friendship and a life-long and devoted love. The brief period of the Spanish American war is brilliantly pictured." Book rev. digest

The forest, work of nature, versus the house, work of man; which shall fall? The Darke has built their house in Dormer forest, many years ago, and they abide by laws that change not. But a new generation springs up—a generation that craves for the vast stretches of understanding and love. Here is Jasper Darke who gropes pitifully in blindness, having lost the God of his fathers and not found his own. There is Amber Darke, his sister, with the soul of a virgin forest, crying to the stars for companionship. Against them is the whole force of organized society, father, mother, grandmother and ghosts of countless generations. Who shall win?" Book rev. digest

"Depicts the typical young girl rebel of the early part of the century, with quite frank presentation of the unruly phenomena of adolescence in the feminine case. The heroine is a restless English girl whom we first see hedged about by convention personified by her father and aunt. Resolved to learn for herself what meaning life may have, Ann leaves home, studies biology in a London laboratory, tries to make her way unaided but is financially helpless, and participates in the suffrage movement, with a resulting experience in jail. Ann's struggle for freedom is continued in a love affair and life abroad with a married man. She escapes the penalty of her daring when her lover is set free to marry her respectably. Acute analysis of the impulses and perplexities of this type of girl." Lenrow

Brynild; or, The show of things. Scribner 1937 302p o.p. 1941

"Mr. Rowland Palace is a writer who becomes obsessed with the idea of self-publicity and of creating a suitable façade for the public to see. His efforts estrange him from Brynild, his wife, who surprises herself by committing adultery with Mr. Alfred Bunter, another writer. The misstep, however, gives her an understanding of cheating which enables her to live tolerantly thereafter with her insincere husband. Cerebral rather than emotional in appeal; rather longwinded in its ideas. Will interest some for its character studies, and for its amusing satire on successful authors and the publicity racket." Bkl.

Bulpington of Blup; adventures, poses, stresses, conflicts, and disaster in a contemporary brain. Macmillan 1933 414p o.p. 1941

"If this novel has a purpose it is to contrast the romantic, inexact mind with the scientific approach to things as they are. It is one man's life from early childhood, through adolescence to maturity—his crude, sexual adventures, his exposure to education, his unheroic war career, and his futile, pompous middle age. Throughout he finds escape from reality in an idealization of his own personality," known to him as The Bulpington of Blup." Bkl.

Croquet player. Viking 1937 98p $1.25

"The young man who likes to play croquet (he is a blameless and ineffectual sort) listens to the fearful tale of a doctor retired to country practice in the fens, called Cainsmarsh. Here all the natives live in the shadow of some huge and terrifying presence which makes them cruel and suspicious of each other. This atmosphere grows upon the doctor, till he feels himself becoming like them—living in fear of a brutality that seems to come from the ground. He seeks the aid of Dr Norbert, the alienist, and Dr Norbert's practical explanation, that modern man is beset by the caveman cropping up again (in various social manifestations) is a Wellsian sermon that does little to lay the ghost." Joan and Peter; the story of an education. Macmillan 1918 594p $1.25

"A British godfather, an empire builder with advanced educational ideas, in search of institutions and curricula suited to the training of his god-children, normal high spirited children of the early nineties, is used by Mr Wells as the mouthpiece for his criticisms of outworn or moribund British institutions, the final chapters of the book showing how these were revitalized by the war. More interesting to those who like Wells as a critic and a prophet than to those who are in search of a good story." Cleveland

"Merciless analysis of the social aspirations, mishaps and love affairs of a young draper's assistant whose complete lack of adaptability unfits him for his sudden rise to affluence." N.Y. state lib.

Men like gods. Macmillan 1923 327p o.p. 1941

"A utopian romance which imagines the race three thousand years hence, a world peopled by men like gods, in which love, health, order, health and energy prevail and all the good things for which we groan in this age of confusion. War is abolished, health is universal, noxious weeds, insects and beasts are eliminated. Language is dispensed with and conversation is carried on by a kind of telepathy. The family too has disappeared and politics, trade and competition, have been laid aside. A group of earthlings is miraculously injected into this new world and thru their conversations with the utopians their different viewpoints are revealed and what they think of each other." Book rev. digest

Mr Britling sees it through. . . Macmillan 1916 443p front $1.50

"Story of compelling interest describing how the great war of 1914-1918 affected an English family, their German tutor and American guest, and especially Mr Britling himself." N.Y. state lib.

"The color and veracity of the picture is such that, even after the vivid contemporary interest in the story has passed, the book will be a valuable document for the future student of the England of 1914." Cleveland

New Machiavelli. Duffield 1910 490p $2.50

"A retrospective self-analysis by an English statesman whose public career has been wrecked by a private scandal, and who, in exile and disgrace, uses his own history as the text and illustration for his theory of the relation between individual character and the great constructive spirit of modern science, politics, literature and art—a theory of the progressive growth of a collective mind behind the interplay of individual lives." Wells, Herbert G.—Continued

Research magnificent. Macmillan 1915
460p o.p. 1941

"This story of an idealist who was led into adventure by his aspirations" is in reality a discussion of the true inwardness and meaning of aristocracy. "A curiously uneven book, containing some of the best and some of the worst things Wells has written." A. D. Dickinson's Best books of our time

* Seven famous novels; with a preface by the author. . . Knopf 860p o.p. 1941

The following novels included were originally published separately: Time machine, 1895; Island of Dr Moreau, 1896; Invisible man, 1898; War of the worlds, 1898; First men in the moon, 1901; Food of the gods, 1901; In the days of the comet, 1906

"The stories are printed in chronological order, and, curiously enough, in the order of merit. 'The Time Machine' is a strenuous and exciting vision. 'In the Days of the Comet' is a sugar-water sermon. Between are gradually descending degrees of narrative effectiveness. But all the first five stories may be called excellent, and one will have to go far to find a package of reading matter to match this for entertainment, excitement and the sheer pleasure of being carried away by a creator of illusions." * Tono-Bungay. Modern lib. 460p 95c

First published by Duffield in 1908

"Tono-Bungay is the name of a patent medicine which is launched by a chemist in a small town and so well advertised that the inventor attains the eminence of principal company promoter of his day. Mr Wells, writing in the character of the inventor's nephew, unfolds the story with much significant detail and from a new point of attack carries on his warfare on the social conditions of our time." Pittsburgh

World of William Clissold; a novel at a new angle. Doran 1926 2v o.p. 1941

"The autobiography of William Clissold—his adventures, of body, soul, and intelligence, in life—form the framework on which is hung this vision of the modern world from the liberal point of view. A few pages of direct narrative alternate with whole chapters of discussion. . . . Born in 1865 . . . his discussions cover most of the things that have happened in the world and the ideas that have occupied men's minds from that date . . . many important contemporary figures being introduced under their own names." Book rev. digest

"The author's ideas for general reconstruction are summed up in a chapter entitled 'Open conspiracy'. A long and crowded book, but it will hold the interest of the occasional thoughtful reader." Lenrow

* Lonesome road. Lippincott 1939 320p $2 (W)

"Convinced against her will that some member of her impecunious family circle has designs on her life, Rachel Treherne appeals to Miss Silver, and that elderly detective, in the guise of a retired teacher, brings her knitting and visits the family. Not only a life and a fortune are at stake—there are two romances threatened. The suspense grows, and Miss Silver is alarmed, but there is no murder and the lovers are set straight." Bkl.

A thrilling romance, depicting the amazing escape from Red Russia of an English secret service agent and the lovely widow of a Soviet inventor.

Werfel, Franz V. 1890-

Class reunion. Viking 1929 204p $2

Translated from the German by Whit-taker Chambers

"A Viennese examining magistrate is confronted by a prisoner charged with a particularly unsavory murder. His mind full of a class reunion which he has reluctantly consented to attend, he sees in the murderer a long-lost classmate of the same name. He goes to the reunion and begins to relive his school days in vivid memory. He continues this process throughout the night. Ridden by a malignant, all-remembering spirit which forces him to write, he reconstructs the follies and sorrows of his adolescence which culminated in a crime for which he had thrown the blame upon the lost classmate. Obviously, the murderer is not the Adler that the judge knew. To the eyes of day, the confession is a scrap of paper scrawled over in a demonic, incomprehensible shorthand." Outlook

* Embezzled heaven, tr. by Moray Firth [pseud.]. Viking 1940 427p $2.50 (W)

The story of Teta, a shrewd but faithful peasant servant, who tries to guarantee her passage to heaven by educating a scapegrace nephew for the priesthood. The scenes are laid in Austria and in Rome, mainly in the years 1936 to 1939 ↓ Forty days of Musa Dagh. Modern lib.

First published 1934 by Viking
"Gabriel Bagradian, a rich Armenian who had lived twenty-three years in Paris and married a French wife, returned to his home in Syria in 1915, there to be caught in the Turkish campaign of extermination against the Armenians. The central episode of the story is the forty days' siege of Musa Dagh during which the inhabitants of seven villages, under the leadership of Bagradian, resisted the Turkish army until rescued by the French." Book rev. digest

Hearken unto the voice; tr. by Moray Firth [pseud.]. Viking 1938 780p $3

"A fine retelling of the story of Jeremiah, the prophet whose warnings of the fall of Jerusalem and the doom of the people made him feared by kings, while his demands for justice and righteousness beyond the mere observance of the law won the hatred of the priests. Honored at the court of Josiah, chased as a wretched fugitive, tortured and carried into captivity by the Babylonians, Jeremiah remained the uncompromising voice of Jehovah, and at the end, old and broken, he stands amid the ruins of the Temple, forbidden to accompany his king and people into exile, but assured that Israel will survive. The story is given significance and relation to modern life by being presented as it appeared to a European, who, visiting the site of the Temple, follows in a vision Jeremiah's unhappy life." Bkl.

Man who conquered death. Viking 1927 134p $1.50

"A tragedy of heroism and strength of will. Fiala, a German watchman of sixty-four, must live until his sixty-fifth birthday in order that his wife and epileptic son may benefit from his insurance. By stupendous energy he conquers a swift and fatal illness and remains alive two days longer than necessary. Well written but depressing." Bkl.

Pascarella family; a novel. Viking 1932 437p $2.50

"When this story opens the six children of Don Domenico, three sons and three daughters, are living in absolute if loving subjection to their stern autocratic father, but step by step, sometimes wittingly, sometimes without their volition, as the chronicle proceeds, they are freed from this tyranny. The scene of the story is modern Naples." Book rev. digest

Pure in heart. Simon & Schuster 1931 610p o.p. 1941

"A passenger on a Mediterranean liner, who has been fascinated by the aloof, courteous reserve of the ship's doctor, watches him one evening as he stands engrossed in thought after dropping something in the sea. The doctor, in those few moments, is seeing his whole life in retrospect, and it is this, in four life fragments, that comprises the story. Through an unhappy childhood, the war years, and the post-war revolution in Vienna, we see the bewildered, painful journey of an idealist, who relies, sometimes unconsciously, on the one stable thing he has found in the world—the devotion of his pious peasant nurse." Bkl.

Verdi; a novel of the opera; tr. from the German by Helen Jessiman. Simon & Schuster 1925 438p o.p. 1941

"A romantic novel originally published in Germany, recounting an apocryphal episode in the life of Verdi during a hiatus in his art when he was in Venice in 1833. Wagner is in Venice, too, and while Verdi hates him as a rival, he cannot but feel his artistic kinship. He determines to visit the German composer, but his decision to make peace comes unfortunately after Wagner's sudden death. The story is a splendid though melancholy fugue on the impermanence of fame. Of limited appeal." Bkl.

Wescott, Glenway, 1901-

Grandmothers; a family portrait. Harper 1927 388p o.p. 1941

"As a child Alwyn Tower pored over an old family album. From casual references and hints dropped from the lips of grownups he pieced together a story for each pictured face. When he grew up he put the stories into a book, each chapter a life, each life a mirror of the scene and time from the days of his grandfather and grandmother Tower in pioneer Wisconsin to his own." Book rev. digest

Pilgrim hawk; a love story. Harper 1940 127p $1.50 (W)

"The story relates the strange events of one day when the Cullens, of Cullen Hall, Ireland, visit Alexandra Henry in Chancellet, France. The narrator, whose brother Alexandra later marries, is concerned primarily with his introspective psychological reactions to the Cullen triangle." Library Journal

Harriet Hume; a London fantasy. Doubleday 1929 275p o.p. 1941

"A fantasy that has the effect of dramatic realism [this] novel is a psychological study of the psychic, complementary relationship between Harriet Hume, musician, and Arnold Condorex, politician. Harriet Hume, with her strange gift of insight, is able to see the dishonesty, the false masquerade, in the career of the man she loves, and, as the cycle of that career is brought to a close, he is forced at last to acknowledge the value of her gift." The judge. Doran 1922 491p o.p. 1941

A tragic story, the scene of which is laid in Edinburgh, where Ellen Melville, working her way, meets and loves Richard Yaverland, and in Sussex, where they go to live with Richard's mother

"The love of the hero for his sweetheart is overshadowed by his almost abnormal love for his mother." Pittsburg

* Thinking reed. Viking 1936 431p o.p. 1941

"The scene is in France. A cultivated young American widow dismisses her difficult lover and seeks to stabilize her life by a happy marriage. She does this, but by accident. Her life, with various emotional strains, set among a frivolous, wealthy group in France, is presented with brilliant satire and witty comment. The novel, while apparently light, is filled with keen introspection; the appeal is to the discriminating reader." Bkl

Contains the following stories originally published separately. Under the red robe, 1894, Count Hannibal, 1901; Gentleman of France, 1893. The first title is still obtainable separately (Longmans $2)

In "Under the red robe" "an adventurer of clouded reputation is sent on a treacherous mission by Richelieu, but falls in love with the sister of the man he has to betray. He redeems his character by liberating the prisoner and giving himself up to the Cardinal." Baker's Best

In "Count Hannibal" "the massacre of St. Bartholomew (1572) is the central historical episode, and the manners and atmosphere of contemporary France are vividly reproduced." Baker's Best

In "Gentleman of France" "the hero is a Huguenot Breton (1588-9)... In an important and delicate commission he acquits himself so valiantly that he wins the love of his beautiful charge, a noble kinswoman of Turenne." Baker's Best

House of the wolf. Longmans 278p 65c
 A story of France in the reign of Charles IX and of the Massacre of St Bartholomew.

The lively Peggy. Longmans 1928 340p o.p 1941

"A historical novel of the days of the Napoleonic wars. The setting of the story is a seaside town in England, all the inhabitants of which have a share in the privateer, 'The Lively Peggy.' Ex-Lieut. Charles Bligh, who lost an arm in his majesty's service and later was cashiered for drunkenness, gives the townspeople something else to talk about when he elopes with the proud vicar's daughter, Peggy Portnal, for whom the ship was named. How Peggy's faith in her husband was justified when Lieut Bligh took out the privateer and captured a French man-of-war makes a thrilling, pungent sea tale." Springfield Republican

Also available in "Appleton's modern literature series" (Appleton-Century $1)

"An excellent, detailed study of American manners, or more exactly, of New York's original Four Hundred, back in the seventies, 'the age of innocence' e.g. of black walnut and victorias and smug hypocrisy." Cleveland

Awarded the Pulitzer prize 1921

The buccaneers. Appleton-Century 1938
 371p $2.50 (W)

"The story of society life in New York and Newport in the 1870's and of a group who, unable to enter the charmed circle of that society, despite their wealth, wit, and beauty, decided to go to London and to acquire there the standing they were denied in New York. With brilliance and satire, Mrs. Wharton shows how they succeeded and the consequences of that success." Hunting

The children. Appleton-Century 1928
 346p $2.50

"Judy, nearly sixteen, is the oldest of the seven children who are the product of the four marriages in which Cliffe and Joyce Wheeler somehow have been involved. Her determination to give the group the stability so constantly threatened by their parents, draws into the family circle other unrelated participants." Pittsburg

Custom of the country. Scribner 1913
 594p $2.75

"This lengthy novel is almost a comprehensive treatise on the American problem of marriage and divorce. Undine, Mrs. Wharton's hard and empty adventuress, with no fortune but her face, is married and divorced with unblushing frequency and dispatch, and her vulgar ambitions meet with rebuffs in various social spheres. The lesson implied is that the American system of keeping the women as ornaments and luxuries with no interest in the business of life is what demoralizes them." Baker's Best

- ‡ Ethan Frome; with an introduction by y Bernard De Voto. Scribner 181p $1.75
First published 1911

"A grim tale of retribution told in so masterly a manner that the story seems a transcription from real life. The three characters are a discouraged New England farmer, his hypochondriac wife, and a girl who still finds some joy in living. Ranks among the author's best works. Appeared in Scribner's Magazine." Bkl.

- Fruit of the tree; with illus. by Alonzo Kimball. Scribner 1907 633p illus o.p. 1941

"Subtle, analytical story of a young social reformer who thwarts his own happiness and that of the two women who love him by his implacable devotion to his ideals." N. Y. state lib.

- Gods arrive. Appleton-Century 1932 431p $2.50

"When Halo Tarrant's husband changed his mind about the divorce that was to end their unsuccessful marriage, Halo had already left for Europe with Vance Weston. He was vacillating, temperamental, and unfaithful, and their irregular relationship, for which she had defied her traditions and sacrificed her social standing, proved no more satisfactory than her marriage." Bkl.

- * House of mirth. Scribner 1905 532p $2.75

"The title is ironical, in keeping with this book's implicit criticism of the garish life and shallow ethics of exclusive New York society. . . Lily Bart, the orphaned child of a New York merchant, endowed with beauty, exquisite in physical charm, keen to seize advantages, alert in social crises, calmly prepares campaigns to marry for the power and luxury that money gives, despite the fact that she is impelled toward Lawrence Selden, a lawyer of moderate means, by everything fine in her nature. Relentlessly she is enmeshed in the toils of debt incurred at bridge; in scandal, the price of a trip upon a friend's yacht; and almost in a loveless marriage. . . Unable to intrigue successfully and the victim of circumstances at every turn, Lily has no other way out save death." Lenrow

- Hudson river bracketed. Appleton-Century 1929 559p $2.50

Also available from Grosset at 50c
"An old house on the Hudson opens the doors of the past and its culture to a Mid-western boy. Here, also, he finds the two girls destined most closely to touch his life, the one his sickly, ignorant and adoring wife, the other the brilliant, inspiring mentor of his literary start in New York. An acutely realized delineation of a sensitive imaginative writer, attempting to be creative, the while he is torn by emotional conflict, and in financial distress." N.Y. libraries

Contents: v 1 False dawn; v2 Old maid; v3 Spark; v4 New Year's day

"Four stories of four successive decades in New York social life which together form an authentic social history of old New York in the middle years of the last century. 'False dawn' is a picture of the city in the 'fabulous forties'. . . 'The old maid' is an intense drama throbbing under the smooth surface of the complacent fifties—a story of mother-love revolving about the unacknowledged parentage of Tina Lovell. 'The spark' tells the story of Hayley Delane, apparently acquiescent to his frivolous wife and the petty social round in which he moves. . . 'New Year's day' is the story of Lizzie Hazeldean—another poignant tragedy unsuspected under the conventional surface of the seventies." Book rev. digest

- Sanctuary; with illus. by W. A. Clark. Scribner 1903 183p illus o.p 1941

"A penetrating study of some difficult problems in casuistry. A woman of fine instincts marries a man whose moral nature she has found lacking, and tries to save her son from the consequences of the taint which he has inherited. The analysis of temperament is very keen." Baker's Best

Appeared serially in "Scribner's magazine"

- Son at the front. Scribner 1923 426p $2.50

"Mrs. Wharton's story is the simple one of John Campton, the great American painter, whose only son, born in France, is subject to military service (in 1914). The father, his divorced wife, and her banking husband all interest themselves to keep the boy out of danger, but he eludes their care and while ostensibly on staff work he is really with his regiment at the front. He is wounded, recovers, goes back, is wounded again and returns to die. The theme of the novel is American participation in the war, dramatized by the conversion of John Campton from a position of indifferent neutrality at the outset to a conviction that no 'civilized man could afford to stand aside from such a conflict.'" New Republic

- Summer; a novel. Appleton-Century 1917 290p $2.50

"Life was dreary as winter in the New England village of North Dormer, especially . . . to Charity Royall, the young girl whom Lawyer Royall and his wife had brought down as a child from 'the Mountain,' the desolate settlement where law and order, mind and morals were as nothing and lawlessness and sensuality were everything. . . Her life was to sit in the village library to which no one ever came, and to share the home of the old lawyer, whom she had cause to mistrust, and who was stern and lonely after his wife's death. But one day Lucius Harney, the young architect, came and changed the greyness of her life into the brightness of summer. Lucius was of the kind that takes all and gives nothing and after he had gone Charity knew that she was to pay the price. Then the old lawyer, knowing, through the sins of his own past life, how bitter that price would be, went through the ceremony of marriage with her, that the village gossips should have nothing upon which to feed. And Charity and the lawyer both found that goodness is greater than evil." Book rev. digest

Wharton, James B.

Squad. Coward-McCann. 1928 300p
o.p. 1941

"Mr Wharton's novel of the trenches strips the mask off the American soldier of the Great war, showing him not as a dramatic and heroic figure but as an ebullient and somewhat pathetic young man trained in bloodshed. Here are tough-boys—roughnecks, uncouth farmers, city toughs, college youths—all massed together in the straining, struggling machinery of war, their individualities lost in their olive drab uniformity." "Thru the eyes of mild little Mr Plummer, a gardener-by-the-day who fancied himself a 'man of 'magination,' is shown the life of an English upper middle-class family. They were the Hazeldines, and they lived in a charming old house situated in the midst of a neglected garden in which Mr Plummer and the thirteen-year-old Gerda worked on Saturdays. Because of his 'magination and his wisdom gained at the 'pichurs' Mr Plummer took the measure of the three charming older members of the family correctly, but it took him some time to see that plain little Gerda, with her love for the garden, was really the mainstay of the family." "The whole fabric of the Blake family's existence is changed when Thomas, the father, meets by chance the great and unscrupulous financier, Mr Knight, and is swept by him into temporary affluence. Celia, Thomas's charming wife, worrying over his naive trust and her children's complicated social problems, is powerless to avert the havoc that follows in Mr Knight's train. Enjoyable for the lifelike characterizations." N.Y. libraries

Greenbanks. Farrar 1932 341p o.p. 1941

"Fine portraiture, sympathetic and humorous writing and an atmosphere so well maintained that the reader feels acquainted with the house and its people characterize this novel of the family at Greenbanks. The story centers around three characters, Louise Ashton, whose wisdom in human relationships makes her the hub of family happenings, Rachel her favorite grandchild who grows from engaging childhood to charming youth, and Kate Barlow, seduced in her girlhood by a village rake, now Louise's companion at Greenbanks. Then there is loveable idle Charles, cold selfish Jim who runs the business, Laura the proud who marries the wrong man, and Letty, stifled by her dull pompous husband. An absorbingly interesting book." Wis. bul.

A picture of Roman life at the end of the second century, under the Emperor Commodus. In a long novel, full of action and detail, we read the adventures of a nobleman driven from Rome by suspicion of treason, in various parts of the empire. A picture of the age, rather than an interpretation of it

El supremo; a romance of the great dictator of Paraguay. Dutton 1916 700p $2.75

"A long historical novel presenting a complete and important study of Paraguayan life and politics during the years 1815-1840 when Rodriguez de Francia was the autocratic dictator of the country. The fictional interest centers around William Hawthorne, a young American soldier of fortune who, after mixing in several South American revolutions, comes to Paraguay to try his hand at overthrowing Dr. Francia and freeing the country." To the end of the world. Macmillan 1939 675p $2.50

"A priest who dreamed of a rejuvenated Catholic church built on primitive faith, enters the monastery of Cluny in the decadent age immediately preceding the French revolution. This is a spiritual book and every chapter contributes to the development of the religious ideal of one man as he progresses from monastic novice to parish priest. The background is vital with color and action, the depiction of the bloodless revolution interesting and new, the scenes of the Terror vivid. An intellectual novel, limited by its religious theme." King's good servant Macmillan 1936 521p $2.50

"To many readers, this scholarly story will have no appeal, but to those who care for the heavier type of historical novel, and who are familiar with the events of the reign of Henry the Eighth, it will prove a rare treat. Sir Thomas More is the central character and his life story is given vividly. His public service, his family life, his courageous facing of poverty, suffering and tragic death for conscience's sake—all are portrayed with sympathetic understanding and rare skill." Hunting

"A solid historical novel, rather slow moving and lacking in drama. The detailed background of life in Elizabethan England tends to overshadow the characters. A prominent family of country gentry attempt to hold their Catholic faith and their loyalty to the queen; it brings persecution and tragedy, and also a courage that refused compromise." Bkl.

"The Cabala' concerns an amusing and ultimately pathetic group of odd people, perched upon the very pinnacle of the aristocratic society of Rome. They had gained the nickname because they were supposed to possess and exert a vast and mysterious power, social and political, which included Church politics. . . Among them they had wealth, talent, culture, learning, wisdom, wit, youth, beauty, rank and power. The irony consists in the gradual revelation of what these awe-inspiring personages were really like, just as private persons, and, especially, how far their gifts shielded them from the losses, sufferings and follies of ordinary humanity." "England in the late 1790s and early 1800s, when Victoria was a baby and her dissolute, unstable, Hanoverian uncles were plotting against her succession, is the main scene of the book, with brief episodes in Germany, Texas, and elsewhere. Christopher Harnish, as a boy and a man, was, because of semiroyal parentage, the unwitting focus of intrigue; he hated his family and pledged himself to Victoria's cause. Romantic melodrama, packed with fantastic episodes and rather crudely written, its characters do not come alive. Details of the life of the times are exactly presented." Bkl.

They still fall in love. Scribner 1929 374p o.p. 1941

"A very amusing novel which depends not at all on plot, as the climax is advertised in the title. Mr Williams is concerned with the antics of the young people of the present generation, which 'is making a slow tidal retreat from crudity,' but still proclaims its mechanistic beliefs about sex. How Evelyn Montague, rich and disillusioned, and Harrison Cope, devoted to science and hard-boiled about girls, struggle in the clutch of what they sincerely term the Biologic Urge and how unobtrusively steered by Mr Montague, king of financiers, and devoted father, they are overwhelmed by romantic love—even as the Victorians." In Krusack's house. Harcourt 1931 281p o.p. 1941

"The disastrous marriage experiences of Jencic, the 'Hunky' are presented here. He attempts to make a home and to keep his strumpet wife and her baby, while they live in the house which Jencic's boss, Krusack the baker, rents and which he and Krusack buy later. The simple, slow, steadfast Jencic is a real person and he is set off admirably by the quick, often humorous Krusack. A well written, convincing story." Bkl.

- Sad Indian; a novel about Mexico. Harcourt 1932 304p o.p 1941

"The atmosphere of Mexico and the character of the Mexican peon are successfully depicted in this story of a stolid village Indian who, for a few months, succumbed to the lure of the city. Bringing his crop of maize to the annual fiesta, Juan was cheated and tormented by the city half-breeds whom he despised, and avenged himself by brutality to their women until, with the arrival of the planting season, he turned his back to all that had degraded him and walked out of the city." - Woods colt; a novel of the Ozark hills; illus. by Raymond Bishop. Harcourt 1933 288p illus o.p. 1941

"A regional novel which uses the dialect of the Ozark mountaineers to tell the tragic story of Clint Morgan, called woods colt because of his illegitimacy. Involved in feuds which led to the killing of a federal officer, shamed by the discovery of his sweetheart's immorality, and at odds with his neighbors, the woods colt took refuge, with a girl, in a bootlegger's cave, where the girl killed him to save him from the posse. Some readers will object to the dialect, and others will find the primitive frankness of speech distasteful, but it is a well told story." Bkl.

- River house. Little 1936 389p $2

"Denise Keith inherits her father's estate on the Stikine river with the proviso that she shall live there during one hunting season before she sells it. Tho she had been brought up by her mother to hate and fear the country, she decides to comply and goes to Alaska and to River House just over the border. There, tho she struggles against it, she falls under the spell of the river and eventually succumbs not only to it but also to the strong man who has wooed her." Book rev. digest

Rocking Moon; a romance of Alaska.

- Putnam 1925 360p front o.p. 1941

"Rocking Moon" is one of a group of islands off the western coast of Alaska, inhabited by Aleuts and by the descendants of the first Russian settlers. Here in order to restore her family's fortunes, Sasha, daughter of a priest of the Greek Russian Church has started a fox farm, and now, at the end of her second year, she is ready to sell some of her valuable animals. On a neighboring island is located the roving trader, Nicholas Nash, whose passionate love-making worries Sasha more than it pleases her. And into this scene, already rich with possibilities, comes, by strange accident, the young American, Gary Tynan, bringing no credentials, and with only his own personality as a voucher. In the absence of Sasha's chief helper, who has broken his arm, Gary goes to work on the fox farm. The story now proceeds with increasing impetus . . . The denouement is the natural outcome of the plot and the closing scenes are really exciting." Literary rev.

- Sondra O'Moore. Little 1939 320p $2

Law and McLaughlins. Doubleday 1936 308p o.p. 1941

"A simple rambling story of the large McLaughlin family in which the search for three men charged with murder is the central theme. Jean McLaughlin alone feels sorry for the accused men and finally marries the youngest, who happens to be innocent. Good characterization; vague and disjointed in plot. A mediocre sequel to 'The able McLaughlins.'" Bkl.

One came out. Harper 1932 285p o.p. 1941

Published in England under title: Dark duty

"In this swiftly told story the warden of an English prison, faced for the first time with the task of executing a prisoner, spends forty-eight hours in a torture of indecision. Unable to reconcile his conviction of the injustice of capital punishment with his sense of official duty, and hoping for a last minute reprieve, he watches the growing sullenness and resentment among the prisoners, sees his wife's horror, and finally refuses to carry out the sentence. The narrative is highly emotional and of psychological interest though it becomes at the end a tract against the inhumanity of punishment." Bkl.

"The story of a woman of thoroughly fine character, whose whole life was spent in making life comfortable and happy for others. Patricia Ellen, daughter of an English innkeeper, married a poor young artist and was ideally happy for a few years until he died. Then she devoted her life to her daughter, Phyllida, even making a second marriage with a man she did not love to provide a home and future for the child. But her undertakings were even more successful than she had hoped. Phyllida became an artist and married happily. Patricia Ellen gained friends and position, and best of all, the beloved artist husband's genius was at last recognized by the world." Book rev. digest

Mortgage your heart. Macmillan 1937 333p $2.50

"Continues the story of the Danish farmer and his family begun in 'Take all to Nebraska'. . . The present book is concerned with the struggles of the sons, first with their father, later with the outside world, to obtain an American way of life. The love story of Hans Grimsen, whose achievement of a college education causes his final separation from Fayne, his sweetheart, is described sympathetically. The language sometimes reflects the hard, rough life of the farmer. Should have a strong appeal for those who know rural life." Bkl

Take all to Nebraska. Macmillan 1936 305p $2.50

"A story of bleak years on a tenant farm in Nebraska, where Peter Grimsen, an immigrant, had taken his family in order to be near other Danes. All amenities of life were sacrificed to the farm, and unscrupulous landlords and money lenders exploited the foreigners. Through all the hardship, Peter held the idea of return to Denmark as a possible refuge; when he learned his sons would not go, he and his wife knew they were irrevocably committed to America." Bkl

This passion never dies. Macmillan 1938 289p $2.50

The third in a series of novels about Danish immigrants in Nebraska and their Americanized children. "Struggle is the theme, struggle to compel the land to yield security, struggle for personal dignity, struggle for harmony in the relations between man and woman. Peter, the father, dies as his land and goods are sold under mortgage, but Mela, the courageous wife, is not beaten down. Nor is Hans, the strongest and ablest son, who like his father, never evades a battle and springs from one reverse to come to grips again with life. In Hans the novel finds its strongest character and its romantic interest." Sat. rev. of lit.

"This is a long, vigorous, disconnected first novel of family life in a commonplace southern town. The elder Gant, a strong, lecherous and often drunken man, and his wife Eliza, self-centered, greedy, and shrewd real-estate investor, are portrayed as parents who thwart and stifle the lives of their children. Eugene, the youngest child, and central character of the book, is enough of an individual to try to break away from family corruption, but he does not quite succeed in freeing himself from a sense of the pain, loneliness and futility of wasted life." Rope for a convict. Doubleday 1940

"The convict who gained the friendship and assistance of the boy and the curate; the star who could maintain her own delightful personality in spite of being 'England's Sweetheart'; the art dealer with a soul as ugly as his own collection was beautiful; the pathetic little old man who swore he owned a First Folio Shakespeare, and was killed for his supposed treasure—these are some of the characters depicted in this baffling and diverting tale." Hunting

Woolf, Leonard Sidney, 1880-

Village in the jungle. Harcourt 1926
301p o.p. 1941

"This is the first appearance in this country of a book written twelve years [before] by Mr Woolf when he was in the Ceylon civil service. It is a haunting picture of the horror and desolation of the jungle and the life of its people, ruled like that of animals, first by fear, then by hunger and thirst. A little village of ten scattered houses, mean mud-huts, is the scene of a tale of passion, misery and crime." Book rev. digest

Woolf, Mrs Virginia (Stephen) 1882-1941

Jacob's room. Harcourt 1923 303p o.p.
1941

"The brief career of Jacob Flanders, a silent lovable English youth, from boyhood, thru Cambridge university, to London, and finally to his death in Flanders, is seen thru a series of impressions." Book rev. digest

* Mrs Dalloway. Harcourt 1925 296p
$2.50

"The story covers one day in the life of Mrs Dalloway and her relation to her husband, her daughter and her home. In that one day we see her in her youth, at the time of her marriage and in her present position. The lives of her friends are as clearly defined. She is a cold ambitious woman, a social climber, yet possessing a certain elusive charm. Although happy with her husband, most of the story centers around her thought of what life would be like if she had married a former lover, Peter. Peter, married, has the same question ever before him. He is never settled. Characterization is very good. They are real people. No definite plot." Cleveland

Orlando; a biography. Harcourt 1928
333p illus $1.49

"Mrs Woolf's hero-heroine is hundreds of years old. At the beginning of the book Orlando is a boy of 16, melancholy, indolent, loving solitude and given to writing poetry; the age is the Elizabethan; the book ends on the 11th of October 1928, and Orlando is a thoroughly modern matron of 36, who has published a successful book of poems and has evolved a hard-earned philosophy of life." C. B. Chase in N. Y. Times

$2.50

Also obtainable from Modern lib. at 95c
"Has no plot, though it has a scheme and a motive. The first and longest part of the book is almost stationary, and describes a party of people gathered in the summer at a house on the Scottish coast. In the next part, much briefer, sea-winds and caretakers are having their way with the house while one year follows another. In the last part the house is alive again with the surviving Ramsays and two of the former guests." Times (London) lit. sup.

"The matter of the story is of little importance, but one feels that through her manner of writing the author reveals her own conception of life—as something fluid, mysterious and frustrating, yet colored throughout with a fragmentary beauty." Cleveland

Voyage out. Harcourt 1920 375p $2.50

"Externally . . . the story of a winter's trip to a small South American resort which a few English people have discovered. . . . More closely it is the story of Rachel Vinrace's discovery of herself and of certain human relationships; and finally of her voyage into death." New republic

* The waves. Harcourt 1931 297p $2.50

"In 'The Waves' . . . the substance of life, as we are accustomed to see it in fiction, is transposed and the form of the novel is transmuted to match it. The six characters, a band of friends—three of each sex—reveal themselves from childhood's spring to the autumn or winter of their lives; but all they feel or do is given to us from their own lips, each taking up the one before in a kind of tranced, yet impetuous soliloquy. Each is alone with himself and yet aware of the others; in the middle and again at the end we see them reunited as a group, and finally Bernard, the man of words and contacts, gathers up the whole perspective." Times (London) lit. sup.

* The years. Harcourt 1937 435p $2.50

"Beginning with 1880 the fortunes and misfortunes of the Pargiter family are followed in detail, with little plot and with many characters who never achieve reality. A novel rich in implications, in the mutations of character with the passing of time, but with slight appeal to the ordinary reader." Bkl.

The third of the trilogy preceded by "Beau Geste" and "Beau Sabreur"

"A romance of the Foreign Legion, in which an American who has known the Gestes from childhood, joins the Legion in an attempt to find John Geste, taken as a deserter while searching for Hank and Buddy, the heroes of 'Beau Sabreur' who had saved his (John's) life. Though it is not equal to 'Beau Geste', it will satisfy those who want to know more of what happened after the death of Beau and Digby Geste." Cleveland

P. C. Wren's "Desert heritage" (Houghton 1935 337p $2) is the fourth in the "Beau Geste" series

y Beau Sabreur. Stokes 1926 370p $2.50

"Continuation of the melodramatic 'Beau Geste.' The first part is told from the point of view of a French officer and is better written than the latter half, which is more broadly humorous and incredulous, being told by two American deserters from the foreign legion who are now desert sheiks." "A world catastrophe reduces England to a small strip of land. Almost all of the inhabitants are destroyed, and of those surviving a large majority are men. They revert to a primitive, predatory state, wandering about in destructive bands, a constant menace to the few remaining women. With a sweep of imagination the author presents the incidents of his world horror, the lustiness of chance fights, and the adventures and marital adjustments of his three leading characters, with a detailed thoroughness that make them for the moment convincingly real." Mr Hodge & Mr Hazard. Knopf 1928 256p o.p. 1941

"The story is fragmentary and fantastic. It is of Mr Hazard—poetic, imaginative, frail—almost the apotheosis of the nineteenth century poet, and of his losing struggle with Mr Hodge, who typifies the world. The language of the book is exquisite." Bkl.

* Venetian glass nephew. Doran 1925 182p o.p. 1941

"An exquisite fairy tale for grown-ups, set in the late eighteenth century. Tells how lonely Peter Innocent Bon, Cardinal of the Congregation of the Propaganda of the Republic of Venice, had a nephew manufactured for him by two sorcerers out of Venetian glass, and what happened thereafter when said nephew wedded a wife of flesh and blood." Wylie, Ida Alexa Ross, 1885-

Feather in her hat. Doubleday 1934 310p o.p. 1941

"Clarissa Phipps, midwife and undertaker's assistant in a squalid London neighborhood, had loved beauty, particularly the beauty of stage and opera, all her life. She has raised her only son most carefully, giving him advantages far beyond his station, and then, when he is twenty-one, she tells him she is not his mother, gives him two thousand pounds, and sends him out into the world. Richard, romantic, chivalrous, and very innocent, makes some pretty bad blunders but in the end justifies Clarissa's boast that she can always pick a winner." Book rev. digest

Furious young man. Little 1936 306p o.p. 1941

"Fired by youthful zeal and faith in the principles of communism, Tor Wyatt went to Russia, where he married a loyal Soviet worker. Disillusionment followed when he saw communism in action—his hoped-for Utopia was brutal and autocratic, his Russian wife deserted him, and he returned to conservative England and an English sweetheart. Melodramatic and tinged with propaganda." Bkl.

To the vanquished. Doubleday 1934 281p o.p. 1941

"This novel of Nazi Germany pictures movingly the misery of present conditions, especially of the young people who have never had a chance, and of Jews and liberals. Thru it runs the love story of Wolf von Seitenneck, one of Hitler's storm troopers, and Franzle Roth, daughter of a noble physician and liberal." Book rev. digest

Never say good-bye. Reynal 1937 269p o.p. 1941

"This is the story of the Dillon family in a small Louisiana town, as seen through the eyes of Chlo, from the time she was five until she was twelve. The doings of these engaging people—the arrival of a new baby, Harry's refusal to go to college, grandma's stormy visits, the love affairs of May and Angela, Papa's sudden fall from his 'high horse'—are doubly fascinating when subjected to the thoughts and reactions of a sensitive and discerning child." Cella. Harcourt 1938 404p o.p. 1941

"Celia Marston is a middle-aged English wife and mother whose careless ways and mild humor hide a nature which is sentimentally attached to the past and rebellious at times of the present. She later learns, however, to become more satisfied with her lot in life. The details of her daily life, along with ups and downs of her family, relatives, and friends are shown in this leisurely paced, rather pleasant story of ordinary life." Bkl.

The curate's wife. Harcourt 1934 333p o.p. 1941

"This novel continues the story of 'Jenny Wren'. . . Dahlia, the older of the two sisters, married to a curate, finds many adjustments necessary in her way of life and point of view and Jennie, the more fastidious and temperamental, adapts herself rather surprisingly to a new situation. For those who enjoy the leisurely type of English novel." Wis. bul.

Jenny Wren. Harcourt 1933 342p o.p. 1941

"Jennifer Randall . . . and her sister Dahlia are the daughters of ill-assorted parents—a gentle scholar who had married beneath him, and his beautiful but common wife. When the father dies, mother and daughters try to earn a living by taking lodgers. Dahlia, beautiful and vital, like her mother, gets what zest she can out of a bad situation. Jenny, romantic and fastidious, dreams of escape. The lovers that provide escape, tho not the ones dreamed of, have their points; for Jenny, the faithful lodger, at first despised, and for Dahlia, the sombre curate who lived next door. At the same time their jolly mother, of whom they are little ashamed, yields to an old and persistent wooer." Book rev. digest

Also published under titles: "Misses Mallet" and "Bridge dividing"

"Living together under one roof the Misses Mallet were always dignified and outwardly placid, and their narrow lives had apparently little room for emotion, but beneath their calm exterior was a kind of smoldering excitement intensified by traditions of reticence. The arrival in their midst of a niece and the following events form a story of absorbing interest." Bkl.

* Miss Mole. Harcourt 1930 293p $2.50

"This book has simplicity, wit, and a real feeling for humanity and its foibles. Miss Hannah Mole is in the trying position of earning her living in the homes of others. As housekeeper for a Nonconformist minister and his children in a provincial English town, she is regarded as a drab spinster. In reality she is a courageous adventurer, joyously sensitive to beauty and harboring a capacity to make drama out of humdrum things." Cleveland

Vicar's daughter Harcourt 1928 320p o.p. 1941

"A comedy of errors with excellent characterization, artistically worked out. Life in a quiet English vicarage is portrayed here, with the misapprehensions and amusing situations arising from a supposed secret in the vicar's past. Delightfully written." Bkl

The story of three generations of Wildens and their stone cottage in the idyllic Gladden Valley on the northern border of Shropshire. David and Jenny, cousins of the youngest generation, fall in love at first sight as children. They become separated, and the cottage is deserted. Manifest are the adventures and sufferings of each—almost sordid, indeed, at times, but always adequately picturesque, before their inevitable return to the old cottage." Spectator

House under the water. Harper 1932 476p $2.50

"The author, who has a gift for story telling, holds the reader's interest all thru the long story of violent-tempered Griffith Tregaron who tries to dominate the estate he has inherited in Wales in the same way that he dominates his family. In the end he sells the entire valley as a reservoir and the waters obliterate it. Philippa, youngest daughter, is the one who had loved the place most and it is a long time before she can go back to look on the changed scene." Wis. bul.

Love is enough. Knopf 1927 2v o.p. 1941

Published in England under title: Portrait of Clare

"With the English countryside for its background and its roots firmly planted in the Victorian past—this quiet, leisurely story moves serenely into the immediate present, with no violent shocks to mark the transition." Book rev. digest

"This book brings to use once again the chance to lose ourselves in the lives of human beings who are real enough to win our sympathy; who are, above all, revealed to us by an artist so that we can feel once again the eternal beauty of an immortal world. . . . Every sort of love is here, physical, spiritual, mental, for husband and child and lover, love quiescent, religious, rebellious, triumphant, and through it all Clare is never sentimentalized, never melodramatized, never falsified in any way." Hugh Walpole in Books (N. Y. Herald Tribune)

Mr and Mrs Pennington. Harper 1931 546p $2.50

"The story of two pleasant English young people who meet on a holiday, fall in love, marry and set up housekeeping. Both are charming, but Dick is the finer-grained of the two. Susan is light-minded and shallow underneath her charm and during Dick's long absence she is unfaithful to him. Out of the resulting complications, Dick finds himself accused of murder, but is acquitted, forgives Susan and they start over again." Wis. bul.

* My brother Jonathan. Knopf 1928 437p $1.35

"The steadfast devotion of Jonathan Dakers to his ideals and to his brilliant and attractive young brother Harold, commits him from the beginning to a life of sacrifice. Unembittered by his parents' injustice or Harold's easy success and popularity, Jonathan goes his plodding way, patiently accepting his role as unacknowledged mainstay of his impractical family. Rewards come to Jonathan from his selfish devotion as physician in a Black Country mining town (in England). The war comes and the crowning sacrifice, when Jonathan gives up his dearly beloved Eddie to Harold, who returns to life after reported death. After that the sacrifice of the good doctor's life, as the result of an infection, hardly weighs in the scales of his giving." Book rev. digest

The Redlakes. Harper 1930 617p $2.50
Appeared in England under title: Jim Redlake

"A satisfying novel for readers of rather old-fashioned tastes, covering a broad field, England, Africa and the war (of 1914-1918), with many characters, plot and a definite outcome. The African scenes are especially vivid." Wis. bul.

* They seek a country. Grosset 602p $1
First published 1937 by Reynal

"The story opens in England just 100 years ago. Convicted of the crime of poaching, John Oakley is to be transported to Van Dieman's Land. But when the convict ship reaches South Africa, he makes his escape and thereafter his fate is tied up with that of the Boer family with whom he finds refuge. The author, who heretofore has written only of the English countryside, was stationed in Rhodesia during the war. His interest in the country dates from that time and he has made it the background of a fine and moving novel." Wis. bul.

Followed by "City of gold"

This little world. Harper 1934 435p o.p. 1941

"A leisurely study of a small English village in the post-war era (of 1919), developing the idea that this little community is an England in miniature and that by studying this small group of people we may better understand the country at large. The characters are portrayed with sympathy and skill, and the whole makes a refreshing change from the current philosophy of despair at the depression. Recommended for the intelligent reader." Hunting

White Ladies. Harper 1935 492p o.p. 1941

"This well-written English novel covers three generations in a midland industrial family. There may be something symbolic in the swiftly-born passion of Bella Tinsley of the 3rd generation for the lovely country house, White Ladies; for in the end she relinquishes it to turn back to the dark smoke-ridden valley where she finds contentment in marriage with the manager of her mills." Wis. bul.

Woodsmoke. Dutton 1924 334p $2.50

"The story of an amateur expedition, or safari, into the African bush, undertaken by two Englishmen and the wife of one. Jack Rawley, an unfortunate neurotic possessed of wealth and a taste for geology and photography, was passionately devoted to his wife, who gave him loyalty, without love. Rawley was a perfect foil to the resolute Captain Antrim who accompanied them as guide, but Antrim's loyalty to his sense of honor was as strong as Janet Rawley's. Their dependence upon each other in the terrors and perils thru which they passed in their ill-fated expedition and Rawley's insensate jealousy were bound to bring Janet Rawley and Jim Antrim closer together and in the end a way was smoothed for these two predestined lovers. The human drama of the story, tense as it is, is second to the power and romance of Africa itself, its sights and sounds and smells." Book rev. digest

River house. Scribner 1929 304p $2.50

"A tender and affectionate picture of the old South that lingers on into these modern times. Young John Dandridge and his bride bring the breath of youth and a new generation into the old house, but they are powerless to change its ways. A novel of great charm." Wis bul.

* So red the rose. Scribner 1934 431p y $2.50

"This novel of the South, just before and during the Civil war, portrays with beauty and understanding the life of the wealthy southern planter at its best. The story concerns the families of two plantations near Natchez, Mississippi, and the course of the war is described only as it touches these people. This is so skillfully done, however, that through brief episodes the whole panorama of the war is made clear." Bkl.

"The best and most completely realized novel of the Deep South in the Civil War that has yet been written." Ellen Glasgow

Torches flare. Scribner 1928 381p $2.50

"A young southern woman comes to New York, mingles with a Greenwich village group, and is given a part in a play. She makes a tremendous hit, and on the night of her success consummates her first love affair. In the midst of her intense happiness, illness calls her back to her Mississippi home town. Her lover follows. But there in her home environment things are not the same. The sweetness has gone out of their love, and when Lena discovers Arthur's deception the end comes. The story is written presumably by a man who is Lena's steadfast friend." Book rev. digest

Ashes; tr. from the Polish by H. S. Zand.
Knopf 1928 2v o.p. 1941

"With minute realism of detail and vividness of local coloring, the author, called by many the master of Polish fiction in his day, has given us that period after the downfall of the old Polish State when her soldiers were faithfully following Napoleon in his wars. The excitements and horrors of war are painted in unforgettable scenes in this tale 'heroic in size, in treatment, in perspective, yet always human.'" Hunting

Knopf 1924 437p $2

Also available from Smith, P. at $1.50
First published 1877 in France. Also published under title: The dram-shop
"This book first made Zola famous. The central idea is the ruinous effect, social and moral, of drinking; and pathetic interest attaches to Gervaise, the ill-used victim of circumstances, corrupted in her very infancy yet preserving the feminine traits of tenderness and modesty. The original is appallingly outspoken, and shocked the public with its terrible revelations of the social depravity due to drink. The grossness of the argot and of the incidents is, of course, much modified here." Baker's Best Downfall (La débâcle); a story of the horrors of war; tr. by E. A. Vizetelly.

Smith, P. 534p $1.50

First published 1892

"Naturalistic account of the disastrous campaign that ended in Sedan as it was seen and endured by two private soldiers who were in the thick of the fight. Not only are the awful realities of modern warfare brought before the eye, but the intolerable fatigue of the marching, the agonies of the hospitals, and the degradation and misery experienced by prisoners of war are depicted with ruthless force. Still more tragic are the episodes of revolution and massacre inside beleaguered Paris." Baker's Best

First published in English in 1885

"A study of life in the mines. The illegitimate son of Gervaise, Etienne Lanier, a socialist, is forced to work in the mines. Low wages and fine cause a strike, of which Lanier is one of the leaders. He counsels moderation; but hunger drives the miners to desperation, and force is met by force. Several are killed, Lanier is deported, and the miners fall back into their old slavery." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

"The greatest novel of the labor movement, one of the masterpieces of nineteenth century French literature and today, more than ever, a true model of the social novel." Matthew Josephson in Introduction

* Nana; introduction by Ernest Boyd. Modern lib. 517p 95c

First published in English in 1884. Sequel to "L'assommoir"

"A study of the life of a courtesan and actress. Nana is the daughter of Gervaise and the drunkard Coupeau. She grows up in the streets and disreputable haunts until she comes under the notice of a theatre manager. Her great physical beauty attracts men of all classes, and none resist her. . . The greatest fortunes are dissipated by her, and yet at her door is heard the continual ring of the creditor. She contracts the black smallpox, and dies deserted and wretched." H. R. Never enough. Liveright 1932 464p $2

"The personal histories of eight unrelated characters, each typical of some phase of American life during the twenties, are used to build up a novel that in spite of the mass of detail and the diversity of individual stories, which only occasionally merge, has unity and power. With convincing realism it portrays the extravagance, restlessness, and lack of purpose that characterized much of the life of that decade. Some readers will find its frankness offensive." Bkl.

"If you've ever wondered what a picket line thinks about, here is Miss Zugsmith to give you the low-down in a department-store strike novel all of whose characters, including the boss and the stool pigeon, are human. - * Case of Sergeant Grischa; tr. from the German by Eric Sutton. Viking 1928 449p $2.50

The third of a tetralogy proceeded by "Young woman of 1914" and "Education before Verdun," and followed by "Crowning of a king"

"A poor little Russian soldier, longing for home is caught escaping from a German prison camp. Though he was erroneously condemned to death as a spy, the High Command decrees he must yet pay the penalty for political reasons and for the effect of discipline on the other men. Futile efforts are made in Grischa's behalf and the whole is a greatly moving, powerful tale, drawn with simple fidelity and pervaded with universal implications." N.Y. libraries

- Claudia; a novel; tr. by Eric Sutton. Viking 1930 252p o.p. 1941

"This early novel . . . is made up of episodes in the courtship and marriage of a young professor and a cultured German girl. Claudia is a sheltered, over-sensitive character, unable to face life squarely, whose development through emotional and mental adjustments is revealed with delicacy and fine perception. The slight plot, combined with the subtle psychology of a rather artificial art world, will perhaps limit the book's appeal." Bkl.

- Crowning of a king; tr. by Eric Sutton. Viking 1938 458p $2.50

The 4th of the author's tetralogy of war novels preceded by "Young Woman of 1914," "Education before Verdun," and "Case of Sergeant Grischa"

"Fictionized social history, behind the German eastern front during the last part of the World war [of 1914-1918]. It is concerned with the constant struggle between the generals themselves, and between groups who wanted conquest and those who desired an honorable peace. The book is loosely held together by the personal story of young Captain Winifred, who believes in his cause, but who finally loses all illusions. A substantial book of great detail, limited in appeal to intelligent readers interested in the complicated backgrounds of modern political situations in Germany." Bkl.

- De Vriendt goes home; tr. by Eric Sutton. Viking 1933 337p $2.50

"The scene is Palestine in 1929. Against a background of intrigues and clashes between orthodox Jews, Zionists and Arabs, is told the story of de Vriendt, a learned Jew Suspected by the Arabs of a homosexual affair with a young Arabian, bitterly hated by the politically inclined Zionists, de Vriendt's life is threatened and he is finally murdered. The English secret service man who investigates the murder attempts to see justice done, but is not entirely successful. The tone of the book is pessimistic." Book rev. digest

- * Education before Verdun; tr. from the German by Eric Sutton. Viking 1936 447p $2.50

Novel of the first World war following in sequence "Young woman of 1914" and preceding "Case of Sergeant Grischa"

"While not of the same caliber as 'The case of Sergeant Grischa,' this novel of injustice within the German army is a powerful commentary on human nature under the stress of war, simply yet movingly written. How the life of Private Bertin becomes linked with the affairs of the Kroysing brothers, how he arouses one brother to avenge the death of the other, a victim of his superior officers' treachery, and how Bertin develops as a thinking man are the themes which stand out conspicuously against the dramatic recreation of the months before Verdun." N.Y. libraries

- Young woman of 1914; tr. from the German by Eric Sutton. Viking 1932 346p o.p. 1941

Chronologically the first of the author's tetralogy of war novels, followed by "Education before Verdun," "Case of Sergeant Grischa," and "Crowning of the king"

"The story of Werner Bertin, a gifted young writer who became a common soldier, and Lenore Wahl, who, for a year before the outbreak of the war, had been Bertin's mistress. Their forced separation, Lenore's resort to abortion because family opposition made marriage impossible, her resentment of Bertin's absorption in military life, and her changing attitude toward him, are handled in a masterly way, and the book, though lacking the intensity of 'The case of Sergeant Grischa,' is an impressive portrayal of people feeling the first impact of war, and of a girl groping toward a freer womanhood." - * Beware of pity; a novel tr. from the German by Phyllis and Trevor Blewitt. Viking 1939 498p $2.50 (W)

Also obtainable from Sun dial at $1

- Buried candelabrum; tr. by Eden and Cedar Paul; illus. by Berthold Wolpe. Viking 1937 149p illus $2.50

"The seven-branched candelabrum, the sacred Menorah of the Jews, was stolen and re-stolen by vandals, who took it from country to country. Then a very old man, Benjamin, recovered the Menorah and found for it a secret burial place where it might rest forever. A dignified story based on an old Jewish legend." Bkl.
